Hospital promise at least sounds good for county

by MARTHA PERKINS
Editor

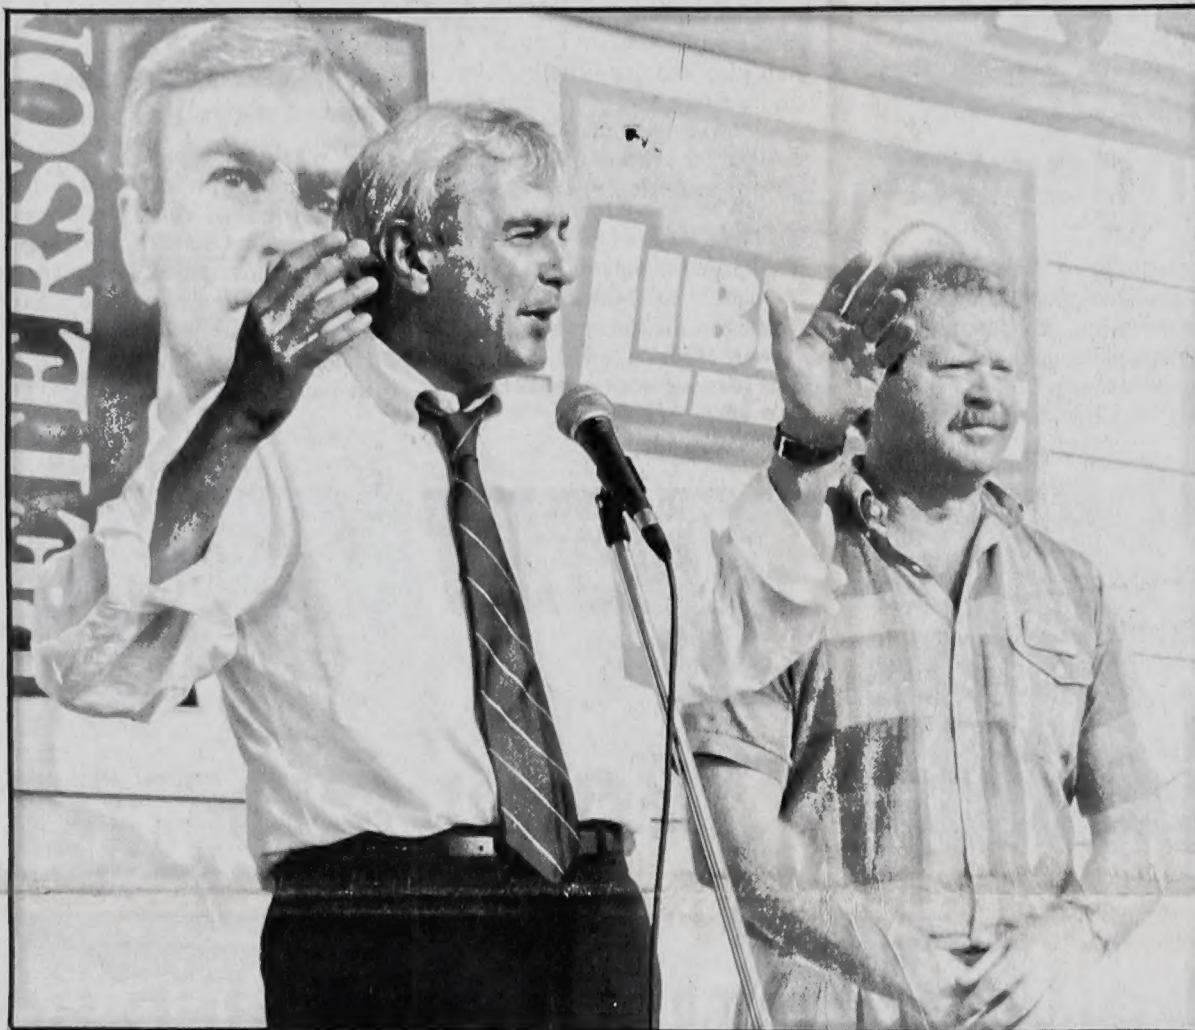

Did Premier David Peterson make a promise that the 18-bed chronic care unit would go ahead?

On Saturday afternoon at a Liberal barbecue near Little Britain, a CKLY radio reporter asked Peterson if there will be some movement on the Haliburton Hospital expansion.

'We're going to put a facility there,' Peterson said in the taped interview.

But then he said 'We're going to go at it in terms of the appropriate needs for the community.' His next reference was to the long-term health care committee study now underway. Committee spokespeople have said that beds might not be the answer to the county's needs.

However, a call to the Ministry of Health revealed that the Premier's words did not originate from any approval from that office.

Firing up the troops...

THE LIBERAL MESSAGE: Premier David Peterson was in full rhetorical flight last Saturday when he made a brief stop at a Liberal picnic near Little Britain. On hand to greet him were incumbent MPP John Eakins, who is retiring, and Pat O'Reilly, right, who hopes to retain the seat the Liberals have held for 15 years.

More power to Kennisis

by LEN PIZZEY

Ontario Hydro plans to spend $2.5 million to increase the supply of electricity to the Kennisis Lake area before the end of next year. The project, outlined by Hydro's Minden area manager, John Lane, at a meeting of the Kennisis Lake Cottagers Association on Saturday, includes a new substation south of Kennisis Lake and extension of a 44,000 volt feeder line to serve it.

Power to the Kennisis Lake area presently is routed through a substation at Cranberry Lake. A 12,000 volt line carries current from the substation northward, where it splits into lines that feed the south and north shore of the lake, as well as Little Kennisis. When the new substation is completed, a 44,000 volt line will bring power to it, and voltage in the lines encircling the

by LEN PIZZEY

Premier David Peterson brought his now familiar campaign message of Liberal wisdom, NDP profligacy and Tory heartlessness to several hundred party faithful who attended a barbecue on the John Walden farm south of Lindsay on Saturday afternoon.

Peterson, looking confident and relaxed despite his party's slumping fortunes in the polls and the rigours of a day that had begun in Ottawa and included brief speeches in Kemptville, Kingston and Port Hope, was greeted by incumbent John Eakins, who will retire officially after Thursday's election, and candidate Pat O'Reilly, who hopes to retain the seat for the Liberals.

Peterson spent several minutes shaking hands and chatting briefly with party supporters before mounting the podium to fire up the troops.

Peterson said there was a bittersweet edge to sharing the occasion with John Eakins, "my dear and cherished colleague who has served the riding so well for 15 years."

He described Eakins as "a model of judgement, reason, service and commitment", both in opposition and on the government side of the house, and said he has "enobled the profession" of politician.

Peterson added a new promise to the long list he has chalked up as the campaign reaches a climax. He announced that a Liberal government

Chamber wants tourism to go back to its roots

by MARTHA PERKINS
Editor

Instead of just complaining about the decline in tourism, the Haliburton Highlands Chamber of Commerce had some recommendations to make to Tourism and Recreation Minister Ken Black when he visited the area Wednesday.

The province should dismantle the Ontario Travel Association Program and replace it with a grass roots Rural Tourism Development Foundation.

"It would develop and implement programs and strategies to attract visitors to remote and outlying areas beyond metropolitan areas and examine proposed solutions in targeting their markets," the Chamber proposal says.

Overseeing the program would be a part-time co-ordinator who would establish marketing plans. He or she would work with a board of directors, who would also set up a marketing schedule for attendance at international shows by local entrepreneurs.

As well, the program would develop travel agent/wholesaler packages, prepare and administer a marketing survey, and work with travel writers to develop articles to be copied into major North American publications.

The Bancroft-Haliburton Community Industrial Training Committee would continue to provide educational seminars to operators and owners.

Cost would total $83,000 and is broken down as follows: Co-ordinator, $20,000; overhead, $5,000; expenses, $5,000; show attendance, $15,000; survey, $10,000; travel package, $15,000; travel writers, $8,000; and education seminars, $5,000.

Because impetus would be coming from people in the business, the Chamber hopes the rural foundation will be more successful than OTAP, of which Haliburton is a member through the Central Ontario Tourist Association.

There are two reasons COTA has failed Haliburton, the report says. First, the geographic area cannot be readily marketed as a tourist area because there are no real common market characteristics. Second, "the organization is not really 'roots' driven, because it was created by government and partially funded by government."

'Haliburton must compete with many others for its share of the provincial market. We cannot become complacent.'

As well, COTA membership is six per cent of the Chamber's marketing budget and COTA's advertising and promotions "often compete with rather than complement our area."

Something needs to be done now to improve tourism, the proposal states. Not only is the proposed Goods and Services Tax detrimental, but it furthers Canada's problems in competing with the United States. "Higher taxes, higher labour costs and the cost of our infrastructure...discourage US visitors from crossing the border and because of comparatively lower costs of travelling within the US, encourages Canadians to travel there."

European travellers must be enticed to visit here. "Economists predict that while North America will be or already is strapped by recession, their economies will be very strong. Small operators should have the opportunity to tap these markets via travel agents, wholesalers and World Trade Shows."

"...Many tourist operators lack knowledge in marketing skills and techniques. At one time the government's solution was providing a ministry consultant. At this time the consultant's workload imposes such time constraints that visits to the area are severely limited. This is detrimental at a time when running any type of business is of such a complicated nature."

Occupancy rates have been down eight per cent, the report says, perhaps taking an optimistic view of the year's trade. "And one of the largest resorts, PineStone, is facing financial difficulty."

"The tourism industry is highly competitive. Haliburton must compete with many other areas for a

Polls open at 8 for Thursday's election

Election day polls will open at 9:00 a.m. and close at 8:00 p.m. for Ontario's 35th provincial general election on September 6.

Electors are issued a folded ballot by the Deputy Returning Officer which they mark in private, behind a screen. The refolded ballot is returned to the Deputy Returning Officer for deposit in a sealed ballot box.

Candidates' names are numbered and alphabetically listed in white on a black ballot. To the right of each name is a white circle. The ballot must be marked in only one white circle. Any ballot marked in more than one circle will be considered a rejected ballot and will not be counted.

In rural areas, electors omitted from the list may cast a ballot on election day, provided they take an oath and are accompanied by an elector who is on the list in that same polling division and who will vouch for them.

An elector appointed to vote for someone else by proxy must ensure that the completed proxy form has been certified by the Returning Officer in their electoral district no later than 8:00 p.m. on the day before election day.

Persons eligible to vote in this election are those who, on election day, are 18 years of age or older, a Canadian citizen, and whose names are on the list of electors or on a certificate to vote in the electoral district where they reside.

BACK IN BUSINESS: It's taken longer than she expected, but Lakeside Laundry manager Mariann Cohen hopes the laundromat will be open again by the end of the month. Damaged during the June Moss's Pond flood, the laundromat has remained closed until Cohen could raise the money to rebuild it.

County gets healthcare grant

Haliburton's initial portion of the millions to be spent this year on long-term care services is $350,000, the Ministry of Health announced August 9.

In May, Health Minister Elinor Caplan announced the province would be spending $52 million this year "for the development of long-term care services." The recent announcement specifies actual proportions of the money.

The news release states the funding will be used for "immediate expansion of community-based health and social services." However, none of the money will actually be spent until the Steering Committee on Long-Term Health Care determines the county's needs.

David Jensen, of the health ministry's Communications and Information Branch, says the funds will be spent "On what services the study identifies as needing enhancement."

The funds will not go towards the cost of the study itself, Jensen stated.

In the release, Caplan is quoted: "Haliburton is one of the first recipients of funding under this new program which enhances community services and reduces dependence on chronic care beds."

The proportion of funding granted to other communities has also been announced. Grey and Bruce Counties has been given $1.75 million; $800,000 is the portion for Blind River, Elliot Lake and Wawa.

Laundromat to re-open soon

by MARTHA PERKINS
Editor

Haliburton Village should soon have its laundromat back.

After the June Moss's Pond flood, owners of Lakeside Laundry were left high and dry. The building, at the western end of Victoria Street, was condemned and it's only until recently the owner has been able to afford to fix it.

"We had to close down because (repairs are) bigger than everyone thought," says Mariann Cohen, who manages the business which her father, Maurice, owns. "There was lots of paper work, we had to get the contractors and tear the building down."

Plumbers, electricians and builders are now working on rebuilding the laundromat, which Cohen hopes to re-open by the end of the month. The machines, which were also damaged when the flood water rushed through the building, must be serviced.

"We were hoping the government would help with it," says Cohen. "Everyone had a hard winter and it was the worst time for it to happen. It's a big investment (to repair the building.) If (the municipality) wasn't fighting (the insurance claims), someone would have helped us before now."

Cohen says people have said to her "You really blew it" or "If you were the old owners, you would have had it fixed by now."

"It wasn't our fault. Why were they on my case? Why didn't the community get together against the municipality or whoever was involved in the flood. It wasn't an Act of God."

"Someone should have come and helped out. I thought that's what small communities are for. We are from out-of-town but we care about Haliburton."

Cohen, a single mother, says times have been financially tough for her and she too depends on the laundromat.

Early Identification underway

Parents with Kindergarten students will find there have been a few changes made to the Early Identification Program.

The program attempts to identify the strengths and weaknesses of Kindergarten students early in the school year by focussing on skills believed to be important in a child's physical, emotional, social/behavioural and intellectual growth. Teachers can modify and provide programs to challenge identified strengths and remediate identified weaknesses.

It has recently been revised by a committee of three teachers, Maraylene Welch, Terry Hartwick and Rosemary Malott.

All children will be in class at least once by the first Monday after Labour Day and regular classes will begin on this day. (Smaller schools in the county may vary from this procedure slightly.) The Early Identification Program will be finished the last day of October.

Assessment will be made through observations by Kindergarten teachers in the natural setting of the classroom.

Hospital staff demands quality care is retained

by MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

Minden Hospital staff took to the streets on Saturday to make voters more aware of what they say are growing problems in healthcare.

"We're talking about the privatization of healthcare," Gwen Hughes, president of the hospital's chapter of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, says of changes in government direction. Along with several other staff members, she spent two hours outside the hospital sporting a Stop the Cuts button with black ribbons of mourning. Signs waved at passing motorists emphasized the point.

"Is the ministry really looking at the impact of de-institutionalization," Hughes asked.

Recently, Health Minister Elinor Caplan says more money needs to be spent keeping people in their homes. This is one of her reasons for delaying the promised 18-bed chronic care unit at the Haliburton Hospital. She commissioned a study to investigate long-term healthcare in the county, which is looking at alternatives to hospitalization.

"There's not much we can be told about keeping people at home here," Hughes said, referring to existing healthcare programs.

Meanwhile, she says, everyone is suffering because hospitals are being forced to close wards. "Even as recently as two years ago we had temporary closures of beds in the summer. But now the closures are becoming permanent."

These beds are denied to people in all age groups and with all needs. "We feel the impact of that when we have to find beds for patients. We have a hard time finding them," Hughes says. As well, everyone in the county knows someone who has had to be transferred outside the county because beds aren't available here.

Asked why the government needs to spend more money on healthcare when it already consumes one-third of the provincial government, Hughes says "it's where they allocate the money" that needs to be addressed. She suggested spending "less money on the trimmings and more money on the basics."

More facilities are needed, she says, but the government should try to reduce costs in furnishings and administration.

Hughes says that more and more professionals in the healthcare field are willing to be vocal about their concerns. As proof, she says "It's not often you'll find people turning up (to picket) on a holiday weekend."

The demonstrations will continue until the provincial election on September 6.

STOP THE CUTS: Staff at the Minden Hospital will be taking their message to the streets until Thursday's provincial election. They want whichever party wins to give more money to healthcare so beds can stay open.

Drainville says he 'saw the light' by turning NDP

by MARTHA PERKINS

New Democrat candidate Dennis Drainville is taking a light approach to his past as a staunch Liberal.

"I say it was like a road to Damascus experience," Drainville, who is an Anglican clergyman, says, referring to Paul's Biblical conversion to Christianity. "I was converted and saw the light and moved to the NDP."

In 1977, Drainville ran as a Liberal candidate in the Riverdale riding in downtown Toronto. In 1978 he left the Liberal party and did not associate with any particular party until 1988, when he joined the NDP, he says.

Drainville's concerns have focused on the poor, hungry and unemployed. "It was obvious that the Liberal party didn't have these concerns at heart," he says of why he left the party.

Kennisis to get better power

lakes will more than double, to 27,000 volts.

The project is expected to reduce the likelihood of power interruptions that have plagued the Kennisis Lake area in recent years. Lane said total load in the Kennisis area grew by 39 percent between December 1986 and December 1989. Peak demand for power occurs on the Thanksgiving weekend, when cottagers turn on their electric heat and cook turkey dinners for family and friends. Last year, the load contributed to a power interruption that lasted 19 hours, something Lane said will be less likely to occur once the new project is completed, although he was careful to point out that the feeder lines run through forest lands, and the risk of limbs striking lines and tripping breakers cannot be eliminated.

Once power goes off, it can be difficult to get it on again because of the load that occurs when refrigerators, freezers, pumps, ovens and furnaces restart. The load causes breakers in the power supply grid to trip, a problem which contributed to the lengthy interruption for Kennisis Lake cottagers last Thanksgiving. Lane urged people to turn equipment off and unplug appliances when power goes off, and not operate them again for up to half an hour after power is reestablished. The practice would reduce initial loads on the power supply and keep breakers from tripping.

Lane said the Kennisis Lake project has top priority in the Minden area, but he could not assure Kennisis Lake cottagers that it would proceed next year. Hydro announces its capital projects plans in November, and Lane said he is "95 percent" certain that the $2.5 million budget for the project will be approved.

The work will involve some inconvenience for Kennisis Lake area customers, Lane said. Power will have to be shut down a number of times, although the interruptions will be of short duration, and announced well ahead of time so people can plan for them.

While cottagers were pleased with Hydro's plans, they also felt they should try to exert as much pressure as they can, through Hydro officials and politicians, to ensure that funding for the project is made available to the Minden area office.

THAT'S EASY FOR THEM TO SAY: Kim Stamp and Joan and Gerry Irish were all smiles and warm wishes on Tuesday morning as they waved to the passing school buses. Mrs. Stamp is taking a year off from her administrative duties at J. Douglas Hodgson Elementary School, Mrs. Irish used to teach there and her husband was the vice-principal until his retirement a year and a half ago. Do they seem sad not to be going back?

Rhetorical fire aimed at PCs would not tax seasonal trailers, a statement that drew applause from a contingent of party supporters from a Lindsay area trailer park.

In an informal speech that lasted about 10 minutes, Peterson also repeated his promise to reduce the provincial sales tax from the eight percent imposed by his government to seven percent to cushion the impact of the proposed federal Goods and Service Tax, scheduled to come into effect January 1, 1991. The move would cost the provincial treasury at least a billion dollars, and would bring back deficit budgets, after two years in which Peterson's Liberals have boasted about windfall balanced budgets that resulted from more than 30 tax increases during the Peterson administration as well as higher than anticipated tax revenues in a booming economy.

Peterson also aimed his rhetorical fire at the Conservatives' proposal to introduce modest user fees as a way of tackling the health care cost dilemma, and at the NDP who he said are espousing "unrealistic policies that we cannot afford", and proposing tax increases "the like of which have never been seen" in Ontario.

While Peterson exuded confidence at Saturday's barbecue, polls indicate that this Thursday's election could produce a much different result than the premier hand in mind when he called the election in August, just three years into his five year majority mandate. While no one is certain how the candidates in Victoria/Haliburton will fare, Pat O'Reilly may not command the same voter loyalty that helped John Eakins turn the riding into what Peterson described as "a Liberal bastion" for the past 15 years.

main local concerns are the promised 18-bed chronic care unit and the layoffs and closure at Martin Lumber in Harcourt. "My point is Haliburton County has become the forgotten county under the Liberals. (The government) has shown itself to be non-responsive" to the needs of county residents, he says.

Questions of his Liberal past were raised during all-candidates forums in Victoria County. Drainville thinks the questions were planted by Liberals hoping to make him un-ble. Drainville says the questions show the Liberals see him as a threat.

When asked what he thinks of NDP leader Bob Rae's first-place standing in some of the polls, Drainville says "I am working so hard to win this riding, I'm not looking at what's happening in the province."

On election night, Thursday, September 6, Drainville's small headquarters are being moved to the Lindsay Legion hall.

Kashag to thank MOE for study

by MARTHA PERKINS
Editor

The Lake Kashagawigamog Organization will thank the Ministry of the Environment for being stringent about protecting the lake's water quality.

"The ministry has taken a progressive and strong stand. These actions are appreciated," said Phillip Joseph, a lake property owner who's recently retired from the MOE.

He was referring to the MOE's new demands about the proposed sewer line extension to the north shore of the lake. Before resorts are allowed to expand and hook up new units, a Pollution Control Plan test results must show the lake has reacted favourably to the increased effluent load.

Resort owners are upset by this new condition. They say only by expanding can they create the revenue which will pay their share of the extension costs.

Josephs, and the lake association, have another view.

"A battle has been won but the victory has not been ours," Josephs said of the need to support the ministry's position. "We want to keep the pressure on so they don't give in to the resorts."

"We're lucky we have a Pollution Control Plan being implemented," said association president John Puffer. "It allows us as concerned people to be involved and come up with recommendations."

One man asked if the resorts' present septic systems are up to standard. Puffer said the MOE has said standards will be enforced.

Then one woman commented that it's not new development which is hurting the lake. Requirements for septic systems are now much more strict so it's the old cottages and houses which are creating the problems. Their tanks may be completely eroded yet nothing has to be done until the MOE tests the lake, which could be several years away.

Puffer agreed with the concern and said the association supports a Federation of Ontario Cottagers' Association's proposal which calls for all existing septic systems to be approved before a property can be sold.

On other environmental issues, Glen Carter said association members must be vigilant in protecting water quality. If someone is seen bathing in the lake, they should be told this adds to the phosphorous load, which in turn promotes algae growth and hurts lake trout populations.

As well, if someone sees a neighbour filling in wetlands or changing their shoreline, he should phone the Ministry of Natural Resources, which must give permission for such work.

"Don't be afraid to squeal on your neighbours — you don't have to give your name," Carter said. "The time has come for people to become more aware and become more involved."

Secchi dish tests show the lake is "moderately enriched with nutrients. There's been a slow but steady decrease in water quality," he said. He attributes that to heavy development. A land use policy a few years ago said the lake's capacity was 160 severances. Now there are 370 severances, Carter said.

He also mentioned that the Canning Lake association is considering buying a piece of wetlands which is for sale. This area is enjoyed by many and if owned by the association, could be kept in its natural state for all to enjoy in perpetuity.

More people should be able to enjoy safe navigation of Kashagawigamog and Grass Lakes when the association puts markers on the danger spots.

Those danger spots become predominant when the water level drops and Ernest Thorn, a Sugar Bush cottager who is in on the newly-formed Trent Severn Waterway Council, wants members to do something about it. The council is encouraging people to attend a public water levels meeting on Friday, September 28 at the Haliburton.

Haliburton must adapt to changing trends

Tourism minister says old methods will not work in today's competitive global market

by MARTHA PERKINS
Editor

Tourism operators must adapt to the changing markets and not rely on old methods of promoting the Highlands, the Minister of Tourism and Recreation told Haliburton Highlands Chamber of Commerce representatives on Wednesday.

"The two-week resort package is dead in the water yet few resorts offer three-day packages," Ken Black used as an example. European travellers don't want to spend their entire vacation in one spot. Instead, many want three days in Toronto, three days at a resort, three days in the capital region and of course, a stop at Niagara Falls.

"Can you get some resort owners to change their thinking? You need to be flexible," Black added. Anne Larcade wondered what Black's ministry was doing to inform operators of such trends. "How do you get the information back to us," asked the owner of Intra Town and Country Travel. "How do we as operators know what you just told us."

"There's no easy answer," Black said, adding that information needs to be more accessible through existing organizations such as Tourism Ontario and Resorts Ontario.

As well, travel agents and service providers must be able to meet so ideas can be exchanged, Black said. On October 29 and 30, the ministry and Tourism Ontario is planning a marketing conference called "The 90's customers: Finding Them, Getting Them, Keeping Them." It will feature workshops and panel discussions.

Perhaps similar meetings could be held with tour operators from Great Britain, Black said. Highlands operators could meet them in Toronto to find out what British travellers are looking for and design packages to suit those needs.

Meanwhile, the ministry is reviewing how successful the Ontario Houses are in London and Frankfurt. "We're looking at how we can spend money more effectively."

Stanhope Deputy-reeve Ann Barker suggested Japanese markets be tapped. "They travel a lot and money seems to be no object."

The Chamber of Commerce can not afford to market local facilities in Japan, Larcade said. The markets exist, but it's costly and difficult to reach them.

If Haliburton wants to attract the Japanese, Black said, certain changes would have to be made. Firstly, the Japanese don't eat the same food and menus would have to be adapted. Then, more direct flights to Toronto are needed. On a one-week vacation, travellers don't want to spend two days on a plane. The biggest Japanese market is honeymooners who have two weeks off, and seniors, who have time at their disposal.

"For all the ministry studies, the Japanese market reached Vancouver before we knew it was going to come," Larcade said.

What Haliburton doesn't need, she said, are more studies to determine its tourism potential. "We can tell you now, if we wait and do more studies, we're going to have severe problems in this county.

"We've got to begin to put together concepts."

To do that, financial assistance is needed. But Black said the money can't just come from the province. "We're forming some new links now. We want to involve municipal and county governments because they have a vested interest."

Black then accused the federal government of doing more to hurt tourism than help it. "There's no question the policies of the federal government are hurting tourism," he said, noting Premier David Peterson's open letter questioning the Goods and Services Tax. It is predicted to make tourists, especially Americans, reluctant to travel within the country.

"We've got to send a message to (Prime Minister) Brian Mulroney that current fiscal policies are not appropriate," Black said.

In his election campaign, Peterson has promised to reduce the sales tax back to seven per cent. This would help consumers but take $1-billion out of provincial coffers.

Asked how the government would make up that shortfall, Black said "I don't think we believe that in current economic times, an increase in taxes is appropriate. It may mean a return to a deficit budget."

When the economy slumps, Black added, that's the time to spend more money on marketing. "We're suffering right now from a high level of concern. There's a negative mood."

share of the provincial tourist market. Maintaining and expanding its share of this market will require innovation and hard work. Haliburton tourist operators cannot afford to become complacent," the report says, quoting from the recent Keir and Muller Associates study.

Although the tourist plant needs to be upgraded, "the current economic conditions do not allow for large maintenance and capital expenditure increases."

The Highlands' problems are heightened by the fact it is not on the route to anywhere. People must deliberately choose Haliburton as their destination — they won't discover it on their way somewhere else.

There is money to be made in the Highlands, but short-term development does not necessarily add to the county's long-term growth.

"Tourist operators are in most cases sitting on land that is worth far more than the revenues their operations generate," the report says. "If these operations cannot be made more lucrative, resorts will be lost to private developers and the tourism plant will be further diminished."

Finding suitable staff is "posing more of a problem. Human resource management strategies for the hospitality/tourism industries should be thoroughly analyzed and implemented."

Tourism Minister Ken Black would not make any promises about the report's recommendations but promised to have his ministry take a serious look at them.

ton Legion. Help is also sought in listing all water bodies which flow into the three TSW river chains: Drag, Burnt and Gull.

Lastly, the association was criticized on its name. Originally, it had been called the Lake Kashagawigamog Association. But when it applied to be incorporated, rules say that in order to be an association, it must have two-thirds of the support of people it represents. Membership has dropped to 120 members so the executive decided to be called an organization instead.

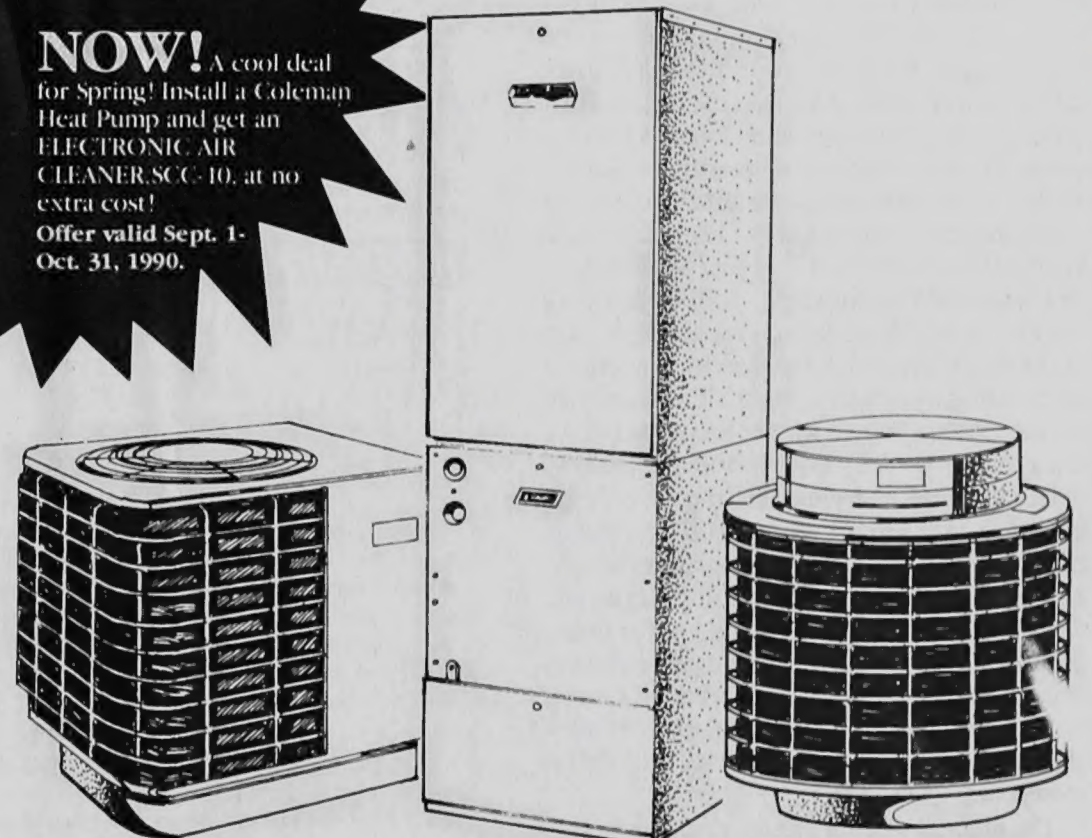

A PLAN FOR TOURISM: When Tourism and Recreation Minister Ken Black arrived at the PineStone for a meeting with Chamber of Commerce representatives, he was given a proposal which will boost tourism in the area. Seen holding the study, Black was joined by Bob Stinson, Ann Barker, John Eakins, Curtis Eastmure and Anne Larcade. Black then did some mainstreet politicking with Liberal candidate Pat O'Reilly.

In the know

As September 6th approaches, we hear a lot about the importance of exercising our right to vote. A right denied to millions around the world, we are almost committing a crime if we don't make the effort to put our mark on the ballot. That's what democracy is all about.

Two days later, on September 8th, we will hear a lot about people's right to be able to read. Saturday is International Literacy Day, when attention will be focused on the millions who are not able to follow a prescription's directions, or find the expiry date on their driver's license. But being able to read represents only half of our right to be empowered and strengthened by the written word. We abuse our privileges by not taking full advantage of our ability to make ourselves aware of what's going on in the world around us.

Taking notes at a meeting, reporters often have to swallow their frustration as someone asks a question which has been answered in The Echo. It's not that we want to be in the limelight, or have fragile egos which are pricked every time we discover someone doesn't read the newspaper. What rankles is that the information was already available, if only people knew how to gain access to it.

This isn't a subscription campaign — the newspaper should be able to sell itself. Newspapers are a way of spreading information, enabling an informed community to draw its own conclusions and make its own decisions. "Freedom of the press is not a property right of owners," says the Kent Commission on newspaper ownership. "It is a right of the people. It is part of their right to free expression, inseparable from their right to inform themselves."

Too often, people react to situations after the decisions are made, and then complain they weren't informed. Meanwhile, ads and stories have appeared in the local newspaper outlining the issue and providing background. Misunderstandings arise when people base their opinions only on what they have experienced, without taking into consideration the issue as a whole. Admittedly, debates about sewer lines and dumps can be off-putting. However, everyone has a vested interest in protecting water quality or dealing with the fact we are a wasteful society. At election time, this need to keep informed becomes more evident, yet just as faith isn't practiced only on Sundays, politics just isn't for elections. Those people we elect go on to make decisions which have an impact on our lives. Only by scrutinizing their actions, and letting them know whether we agree or disagree, do we fully benefit from democracy.

Because not everyone has the time or inclination to go to all the council and public affairs meeting, telephone the players involved, or research the background of an event, there are newspapers to do the job for them. Newspapers speed up the sharing of information, enabling people to keep track of several issues all at once. If not all things to all people, newspapers at least have something for everyone.

The amount of information available to people is astounding, whether we get it from newspapers, magazines, television or radio. Don't stop there, however. Information is also available from a multitude of social service and government agencies; they can't provide assistance unless they are asked, and too many people don't know what they should be asking. Chances are, if you have a question, there is someone out there just waiting to answer it. But you have to know how to use the blue pages, or how to take advantage of your MPP's toll free number.

The full value of literacy is not realized until we learn how to use that ability to our advantage. Words themselves are meaningless until we let them lead us to new discoveries. Information has to be absorbed, not as a mathematical equation which has an obvious conclusion, but as just one of the stepping stones to understanding.

Learning isn't something done only in school. Education allows us to pursue careers which maximize our strengths and is not to be measured by its economic opportunities alone. Once we stop learning, once we stop asking the questions, or worse yet, stop coming up with questions, our development as individuals and as a society will freeze. Life is far too short for that.

The agony of the search

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

OUR READERS WRITE...

To the Editor:

Re: Sally Ritchie's interview with Andrea Burton and the dilemma of the United Church.

As an observer to General Council in London, I felt very much in the thick of the key issue which is dividing the United Church. I would like to say that I regret the fact that Andrea was confronted by someone who was "angry and attacked her in a malicious way". This is unfortunate. I did not see this side of it but we can expect, in anything as emotional as this, there will be those who are extreme.

As I read and re-read the article I could understand how she would feel, sitting among a majority of commissioners who were in favour of the ordination of practicing gays and lesbians, and trying to understand this issue in all its implications. She expressed herself very well and is to be complimented for having undertaken her responsibility with such insight.

We who are in our declining years and whose faith has been rooted in the Bible and whose anchor has been in the United Church have had real difficulty and agony in coping with the ordination of practising homosexuals. Homosexuality was a sin back in the 1920s and is still a sin in the 1990s. The Bible has made this so clear in many places, one of which is Romans 1 verses 24-32—or is the Bible wrong?

I think not! The Bible has been the foundation for our educational system, our judicial system, our health and welfare system. Believers have initiated all of these systems because of their intense belief and caring for our fellow man. The Bible will continue to provide our direction in future.

At General Council, many of us, observers and commissioners had been under the mistaken impression that some sort of democratic process would take place so that the majority of United Church members, who disagree with this issue, would be heard and some effort would be made to regard the will of the majority. Not so. (The results indicated that 69.8 percent of United Churches responding disagree with the ordination of practising homosexuals. The results of the vote at General Council indicated 80 percent of voting commissioners were in favour of ordination of practising homosexuals.) This can hardly be called democratic or understanding on the part of the hierarchy. The result was clear. The door was closed firmly for the second time.

Andrea also commented that "we have to break down the wall between the higher courts of the church and the congregation. Right now neither side is listening." This statement is perceptive on her part and she has put her finger on the greatest problem within the United Church. We don't listen to each other!

As a former member of Presbytery I can subscribe to this and experienced this frustration personally at the Bay of Quinte Conference in May 1989. We don't listen to each other!

Unfortunately some of the issues, as well as Membership, Ministry and Human Sexuality, have been on the table for some time and progress toward resolution is slow. Many of us recognize that the courts of the church are not democratic and it's too late to correct some of the problems. The United Church of Canada has become a socio-political body who seem to have forgotten that the centre of the life of the Church is Christ and our reference book for the future is the Bible.

The United Church may be trying to change to keep up with the times. The fallacy however in doing so, is forgetting the teachings of the Bible, the dedication of our forefathers and the loyalty of the vast numbers of its members whose work has built this great national church, now failing, as it has lost its mission and forgotten its direction.

Trees aren't coping as well with stress

To the Editor:

I found the recent article on forest decline of interest, and I offer some of my own observations related to this decline.

First of all, the general tenor of the article seems to suggest that forest tent caterpillars must bear a large share of the blame for such decline, even though other factors may be involved. My own observations indicate that tent caterpillars are a comparatively minor factor. Let me explain.

Our family has owned several hundred acres of forest in Snowdon township since 1862. I can't speak for any of those years prior to 1930, but in the 1930s

FEIR PLAY

CREIGHTON FEIR

THE LABOUR DAY WEEKEND has come and gone and now we can look forward to the fall season which some people think is the nicest time of the year. We can now take some time out to review the past summer months and to sum it up, the bottom line tells us that it was anything but a record summer. Business right across the board was down in most areas and although people were buying the small items, they were turning away from the big ticket items. It would appear to me after talking to several business people that in the future we can look for a smaller summer trade but a better year-round business. This is what the local business people are looking forward to. They tell me that a well balanced twelve-month business is much better than having to depend largely on two-month business in the summer. We hope that the local chamber of Commerce will also look in this direction. I don't think that the economy even though we are in a slight recession is half as bad as some people would make it out to be. It is my opinion that people are not spending money due to the fact that they are afraid of what will happen to the economy when the GST comes in at the beginning of 1991.

When we read the daily newspapers or look at TV or listen to radio we can't help but feel that the whole world seems to be a disaster area. It seems that people all over the world are disenchanted and that some countries are ready to fight at the drop of a hat. We even have trouble right near home in Quebec. Evil seems to be winning over the good things of the world. Our faith in human nature is always restored when a story with a happy ending comes along. This year as in past summers we hear of stories from time to time of how a lost wallet or purse has been returned to its owner, a wrist watch found on the highway is given back to the person to whom it belongs. Other stories tell of how some thoughtful people are out to help those in need and how lonely citizens are visited by interested friends. It's time to thank God for the honest and thoughtful people still left in the world.

The second annual Sidewalk Sale held in Haliburton on Thursday, Friday and Saturday last week was an overwhelming success. Visitors as well as residents from all over the county came to town to take advantage of the many bargains featured on tables and racks on the sidewalk in front of the participating stores taking part in the sale. Some merchants tell me that they took in more money in one day than they did at the Midnight Madness Sale.

You can always tell that the fall season is just around the corner when you see the H.H.S.S. Redmen football team working out on the football field at the High School in Haliburton. You can start to look for them any day now out on the field working themselves into shape for the upcoming season. Another reminder that fall is here and that winter can't be too far off is when you see an advertisement in The Echo telling you of the dates for registration for the Haliburton Minor Hockey Association.

In my column a year ago now I was complaining about the fact that the government dock and dock facilities on Head Lake in Haliburton were in bad need of compare. A year has gone by and nothing has been done. In checking around I find that we will get some action on this project in the very near future. As time goes on the demand for better docking facilities and a better launching pad should be right up as a top priority on the federal government's agenda. The number of boats pulling into this town dock has hit a record high and at the present time the bigger boats are finding it impossible to use the launching ramp. It would appear that when the water is as low as it is at the present time, and a boat is being backed into the water, it suddenly drops down.

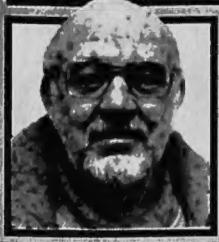

Many repairs have been made to the appearance of the arena in Haliburton during the past summer and new headers were installed on the pipes on the artificial ice system. We understand that the ice will soon be in and that the Haliburton Figure Skating Club is ready to use the ice surface for practice. Minor hockey will begin at a later date.

Here, there and everywhere . . . Hans and Christel Valentini of Mattingly West Germany are visiting at the home of their daughter Claudia Barnum and son-in-law Kevin in Apsley, Ontario . . . Erin Nicholls will be returning to Toronto this fall and will play hockey again this winter with the Wexford Raiders . . . Happy birthday wishes go out this week to Pat Kennedy and Blaine Sisson . . . Mr. and Mrs. Lyle McCracken of Haliburton were in New Brunswick over the past weekend attending a wedding . . . Jim and Arlene Scheffee and son Greg were visitors to Sudbury recently. Greg will be attending school in Sudbury during the next term . . . Congratulations to the newlyweds Mr. and Mrs. Ken Coumbs, who were married at the United Church in Haliburton on Saturday . . . The annual Golf Tournament at the Beaverbrook Golf Course is set for this coming Sunday, September 9th. Proceeds will go to the Heart and Stroke Foundation.

POINTS OF VIEW

The authority of The Word

AS OTHERS SEE IT

BOB GIULIANO

WE STARTED COMING to the Highlands about thirty years ago. Our first holidays here were spent on Halls Lake. To this day, a trip around that lonely, deep lake raises many memories for us.

In the early days we rented Benbecula, a deteriorating, musty cottage filled with mice and raccoons. It was heaven to us, for it provided access to the sloping sand beach and the magnificent sunsets.

A woman of some wealth wanted to provide healing for preachers so she asked a psychiatrist friend of mine and me to conduct two weeks of workshops for clergy and their wives. In return for our two weeks of work with clergy families, we received two additional weeks at the cottage free.

The psychiatrist was also a Methodist minister. I was a minister with clinical training. Our wives and kids came along too. This was the early sixties, so everything was pretty loose and optimistic. Groups of clergy families came and stayed at Ackerman's (then Offens and now "Shalom") cottages. We conducted group therapy morning and night, fed everyone at Benbecula and played each afternoon.

In those days Mary Stiner ran a small grocery store with ice cream cones and candy for kids. Mary's generosity was wondrous to behold. Our kids would hike down to Mary's each evening with a nickel or a dime and come bag laden with sweets. (Did you know you could hide a black ball candy in your belly-button to give to your dad when you got home?)

Fishing from the various points provided entertainment and an occasional meal. Hiking up to Hawk Lake along the river, swimming in the clear depths of Halls where you could see the bottom until the blackness of deeper mysteries below shut you out, watching the bears at the dump, and the Northern Lights filled our days and nights.

We kept going back after the workshops for clergy families ended. Our boys grew up each summer at Halls Lake. Long family talks at night, games and cozy sleep gave us sanity each year. It was a great lake to sail because of its steady winds and round shape.

We moved down to Offen's cottages and rented the old house that had once been an Inn. Stories about the dances each weekend at the inn in the old days. Three floors were danced out of the main dining room, they say. Property was sold for a bale of tobacco with trees and rocks as boundary markers, giving later deed searches fits. The old Inn was in rough shape, but filled with ghosts of earlier days, who sometimes wakened you in the night.

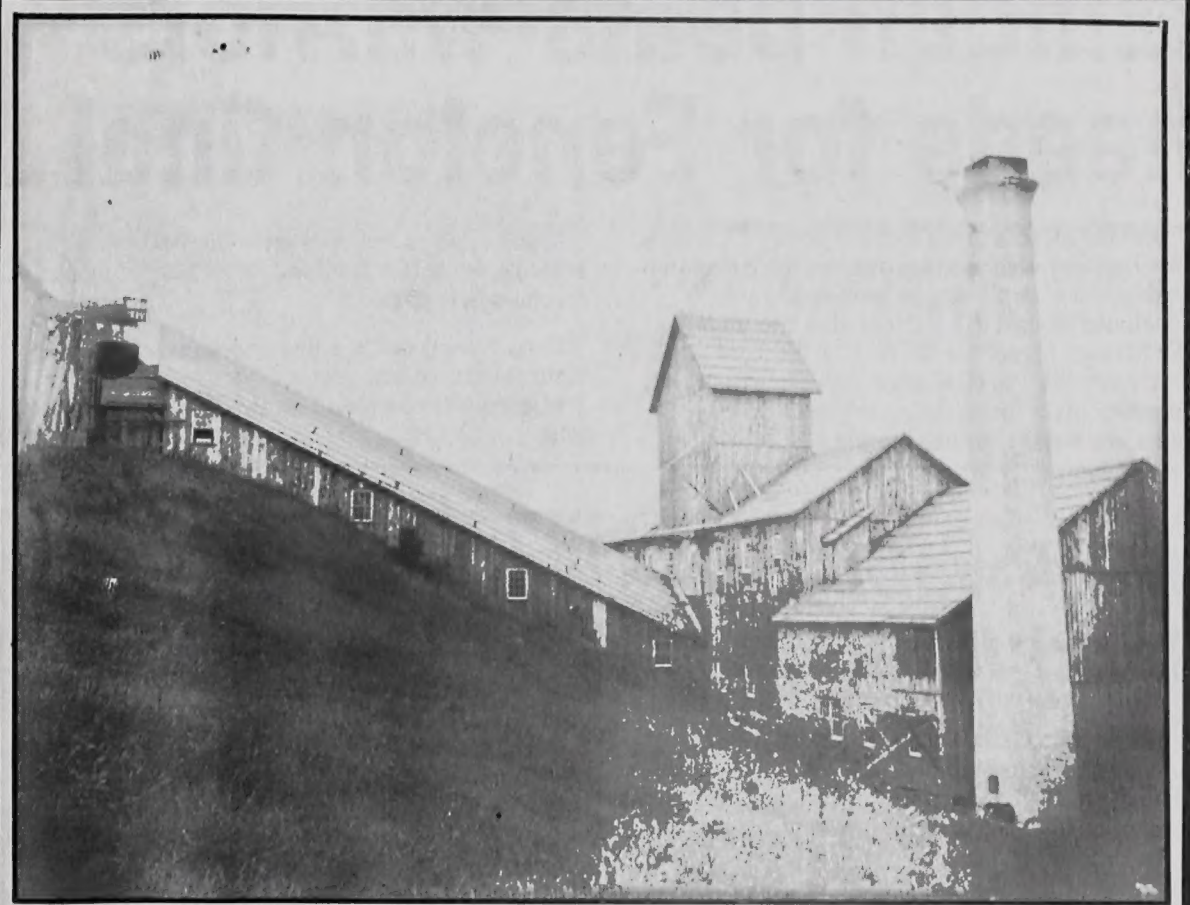

Halls was where we got in touch with our souls each year. Through the imagination of our kids, we could let go and let nature around us make us laugh and cry again. There was the "Black abyss", the dark shadowy depths of the lake, where children imagined creatures that were watching and waiting for unwary swimmers. The "Halls Lake Monster" always lurking in this deepest inland lake of North America, like the Lochness, was often sighted by early morning fishermen in the family or by early teenagers sleeping on the beach at night.

Halls Lake was the place to go when life didn't make much sense. When one of my boys ran away from home at age fifteen, we later learned that he had simply camped out in a backyard of an empty cottage near the lake. Halls was where a son and his estranged wife made up and tried their marriage again. Even the dying in our family wanted to be at Halls to ready their spirits for the new day. Hall's was where I finally faced the burnout of ten years in prison.

Halls Lake has a spirit, not benign or placid, but a vital, sometimes stormy, life giving spirit that gathers in city families and calls them to truth.

More, it was a place that set the heart to creating and dreaming. At the end of each summer, this preacher had sermons bursting to be preached, new ideas for prison ministry or congregational life. It set you on your feet again when you were down for the count, and readied you for battle.

Most important however, Halls Lake always brought my woman and me to the romance of our love and life together. We always went home from these holding hands.

A real pro leaves Canada A.M.

THIS FRIDAY MORNING, as you may have read elsewhere, Norm Perry will be giving up his role as anchorman on CTV's "Canada A.M." after 15 years (and one week) on the job. If you're a regular watcher, you'll probably want to tune in and see what kind of a sendoff they give him.

Norm expects to be introducing his replacement, J.D. Roberts a former prettyboy video discjockey on Much Music, who moved over to sister station CITY-TV's newscasts in Toronto some years ago.

He went on from there to Miami where he's been a high profile news anchor. Caught him there last winter, and he has come a long way.

Norm Perry will never be a prettyboy, but he sure was the kind of professional, experienced broadcaster that type of show needed. I suppose the former soap salesman running the network now wouldn't know the difference anyhow. He wants flash and splash.

Norm apparently left the program to go into a syndicated news program that has since run into money problems. Maybe he'll take a little time off to visit the West Coast lady friend of many years standing that he flies to on weekends when he can. A schedule with a 3 a.m. start and an 8 p.m. deadline hasn't done much for his personal life...

Curiously, Norm is quite shy off camera and away from a microphone, so it was quite a while after I had been working with him at CKEY in 1961 that I got the answer to the question that we all eventually ask each other: "How did you get into this business?"

As a young teenager he decided he wanted to work in radio, and since 'EY was his favorite station, he went down to University Avenue, where their studios were in those days, and asked to see Mr. Cooke, the boss.

How he got right in to see Jack Kent Cooke is a mystery, but he has a forthright way about him, and perhaps the secretary thought he had an appointment. He marched in, introduced himself, and said he wanted to work in radio, was willing to learn, and wanted a summer job.

Cooke apparently kept a straight face, and explained that the only summer job available for a young student was cutting grass at the station's huge transmitter site, then on Eglinton Avenue in Scarborough.

Norm said: "I'll take it," and that's what he did for two summers. But each week when he came in to pick up his pay, he wandered the station, introducing himself and talking to all the staff about what they did, looking over the equipment — and generally developing a knowledge of the business and a great set of contacts.

He got his first regular on-air experience at CKBB in Barrie, and I had a lot of fun in the early eighties when I was sorting my tape files and came across his audition tape for the job he eventually got at CKEY. I sent it off to his Canada A.M. producer, and it apparently was the big surprise item at their staff Christmas Party that year...

Norm was working as an investigative reporter with Brad Crandall on a documentary show called "Tempo Toronto" when I met him, and when Brad was hired away by WNBC, New York, Norm came up with a fifteen-minute feature called "PerryScope" that ran on the station for a number of years.

The most prestigious group of international awards for radio broadcasting are the Ohio State Awards, the bulk of which are usually won in this country by the heavily-subsidized CBC network.

Norm, however, managed to beat them out on three separate occasions — a one-man show, from a private station, with talent instead of a big staff and big bucks behind it.

The success of Perry-Scope apparently attracted Channel 9, who invited him to do a daily feature there called "Perry's Probe." While he was doing this, he was an occasional substitute for Percy Salzman as host, and eventually took over "Canada A.M."

A lot of people are going to miss Norm Perry on that show, and I just hope the delay in financing the syndicated program — and the long distance love affair in Los Angeles — won't mean he's lost to Canadian viewers.

Above all, let's hope all our experienced TV journalists aren't replaced by the blow-dry generation of 'news personalities' the way they have been south of the border...

Saying goodbye and hello

DOWN OUR ROAD

SHARON LYNCH

"BUT I DON'T WANT to go home. Can't we stay another day — please?" Well he remembered all the reasons and excuses he came up with for not returning to the city at the end of summer. Even thoughts of seeing all his friends again didn't do the trick. A return to TV, and an indoor toilet paled in comparison to the lake, the trees and his favourite muskrat that swam every day in the bay. But life had to get back to the usual city routine and fight it though he tried, when you're 9 years old, most things are out of your hands.

He smiled to himself as he watched his own children jumping off the dock into the same muskrat bay of years gone by. When he was their age, the drive back to the city had always taken so long, time he would spend sitting in the backseat thinking of all the neat things he could have been doing at that very moment if he was still back at the cottage. Then finally arriving home, he would find the house smelt musty and damp from having been shut up.

The first thing he would do was go into the kitchen. Here there was an old fold-out ironing board that tucked away into a long narrow cupboard. On the outside of the cupboard door was a mirror. He always wanted to look at his reflection and see how much of a tan he had. He didn't look the same in that mirror as in the ones at the cottage. There the walls were pine and plywood and trees shaded the light coming in through the windows. But in the city, the kitchen seemed shockingly white and bright by comparison and it was fun to see this slightly different self looking back at him.

Now, just as in the old days, he hated the thought of leaving for another summer. But the kids had to start school the next day and his job was waiting. He'd be back up on weekends but it was not the same as the summer. Friday night would find him tense and tired from the drive north, by late Saturday he'd start to unwind but then Sunday he'd tighten up again as he prepared himself for the return trip to Toronto. This being the Labour Day weekend, he knew the traffic would be terrible no matter what time he left. And what a day to spend bumper to bumper on highway 400. Not a cloud in the sky, the lake still warm enough for swimming and the sun gently warm and comforting.

The kids were watching him out of the corners of their eyes, waiting for that signal to come load up the car. He knew how they felt. To heck with this, he thought—life is just too darn short. So he called the children over and told them he had good news and bad news. The good news was that they weren't leaving that day. This they answered with joyful shrieks and he had to quieten them down to hear the bad news. The bad news was that they would be going to bed very early so they could wake up early and leave in the wee hours. After all, they still had school and work the next day. For the youngsters, tomorrow might as well be a million light years away for all they cared. They now had time for more swimming, a boat ride and maybe even some fishing before bed. They were ecstatic.

Later, once he had convinced them bedtime was not negotiable and had them tucked away and snoring, he took a coffee down by the lakeshore to listen to the loons. It was the best music in the world as far as he was concerned. It was becoming increasingly harder for him to leave the cottage after each stay. And he had seen too many speeding, weaving drivers on the highway. It was only a matter of time before his number was up.

The lure of the city had been replaced with other things he found more satisfying and enjoyable. Quiet. Wildlife. Open spaces. And he didn't like what he read in the newspapers and heard from his own children about what was going on in the schools and out of them. No, he reflected, taking another sip of lukewarm coffee, the city is not the best life has to offer. Then stifling a yawn, he turned back to the cottage. Four a.m. would come early.

They were on the road by 5 the next morning. In ten minutes the kids were back to sleep and he was just as glad. It was going to be a long day for all of them. It had been pitch black when his alarm went off but by the time they pulled away from the cottage, the sky was brighter. Now a hazy light hung in the air, softening outlines and curling around the odd skiff of mist. He felt like the only awake person in the world as his car rounded curves past unrippled waters.

A deer stood on the road's shoulder watching him as he slowly drove by. Another crossed in front of his car just a little further on, then stopped and looked back at him as though to say this was their time of the day, not his. One of the compensations of an early rising was the animals he caught a glimpse of before they retreated deeper into the bush for the day.

He stopped at a restaurant outside of Gravenhurst and bought a large coffee to go. The kids opened their eyes for a second when he stopped, then fell back to sleep. The traffic was light as he passed long haul trucks and the occasional reluctant cottager such as himself. But as he approached Barrie the vehicles started to thicken. However it was still ten times better than it would have been the day before.

Rolling into his driveway, three hours exactly from the cottage door, he found himself already calculating how early he'd be able to get back on the road Friday afternoon. Then he stopped himself. What was he doing — living four days ahead? Living for the future was the best way to let life pass you by.

Maybe it was time to figure out how he could live in Haliburton county all the time, not just summers and weekends. After all, he wasn't 9 years old any more. He had more options now.

NORTHERN LIGHTS

VIRGINIA MUENZEL

A COUPLE OF FRIENDS and I were doing a lot of complaining the other day about what gives the federal government the right to begin collecting the Goods and Services Tax as of September 1, when the tax bill itself has yet to be passed. We were pretty angry about the whole thing. In fact, we decided that they couldn't legally collect a tax that wasn't made into law, nor could they legally penalize anyone who refused to pay it. What do you think?

I have decided not to pay it. My intent is to ask, every time I make a purchase, whether I am being taxed G.S.T. If I am, I will simply say, "I'm sorry, I just decided I don't need this service after all."

Have you checked your hydro bill? One friend I was chatting with had received her hydro bill and noticed a bit of a jump in it, so she called the office. After asking several questions, with no real sensible responses, she finally asked if she had been charged G.S.T. She was reluctantly told that she had been charged G.S.T. because she had an averaged out bill. She received that bill before September 1, and could have paid it before September 1. How could they charge her G.S.T. in that case?

Now, I understand new senators are being named by the Prime Minister, who will support the passage of the tax law when the time comes. They keep swearing up and down that this is a fair tax; that all the hidden taxes will disappear; that we will, in the end, be paying less tax. With 7 percent federal and 7 percent provincial on twice as many goods and services, I'm still trying to figure that out. What on earth makes it a fairer tax when an additional 7

Minden beats Warriors, heads for Fenelon final

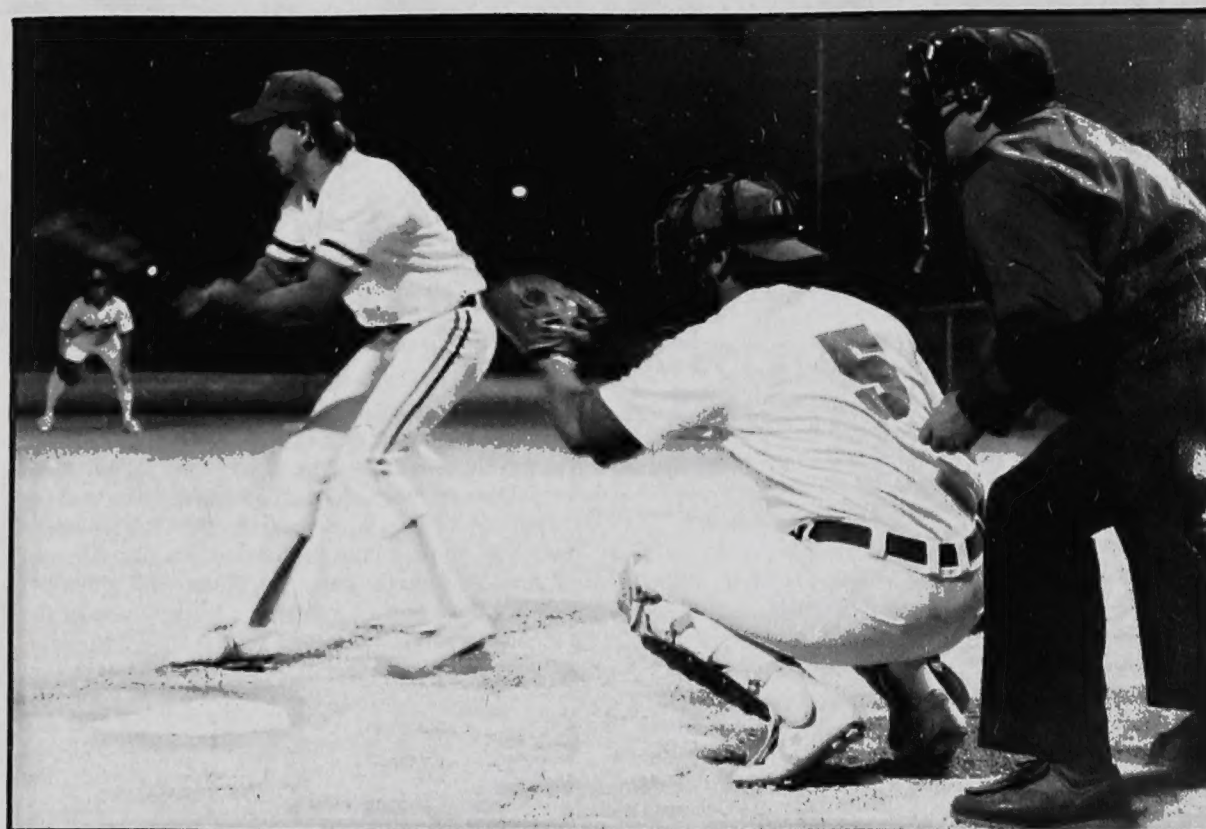

Minden got off to a fast start and never looked back last Thursday night, as they defeated the Haliburton Warriors 5-4 in the league semi-final game.

Minden jumped to a 5-0 lead after two innings as the Minden hitters got the best of Warriors hurler Erin Nicholls. The Haliburton boys came back with four runs in the fourth inning to press Minden hard, but there was no further scoring.

Tran LaRue pitched in relief of the Warriors' Erin Nicholls, while Jack Snell was on the Minden mound for the whole game.

Greg Newell cracked the only home run of the night for the winners.

Minden will now meet Fenelon Falls in the league final.

Minden's hitting earned them a berth in the final against Fenelon.

Miskwabi kids land lunkers

The Seventh Great Annual Miskwabi Area Junior Fishing Championship was held on Sunday, Aug. 26 under ideal conditions as evidenced by the large turnout of 26 youngsters, all of whom caught fish.

Junior Fishing Champion was John Cleveland with his catch of a lunker largemouth bass, 3-1/2 lbs., 19" in length.

Second place went to Tim Votskos for his catch of a 1-1/4 lb., 12-1/2" largemouth.

Smallmouth bass honours were split between Mark Hutchinson and Neal Strickland who each caught a 14 oz., 12" smallmouth.

The prize for the most fish caught went to Tracy Tibbits and Brent Moorehouse who each caught 8 bass.

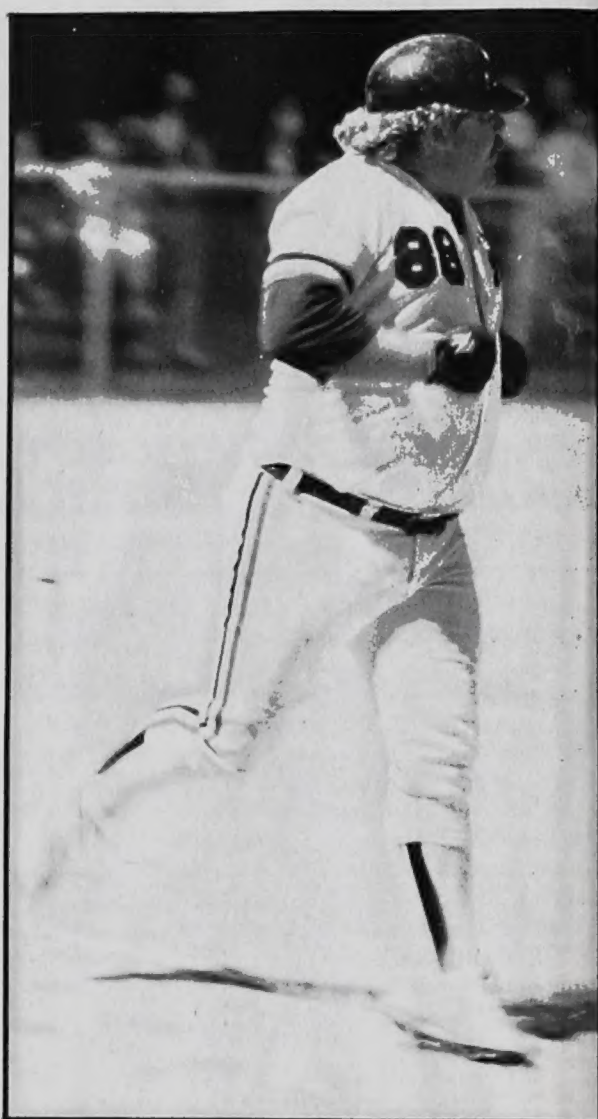

Stephen Marjula was first in the coarse fish category with 15 sunfish and honours for the most original category went to Matthew Uzulis for his tadpole.

Winners received fishing kits, snorkel outfits, a watch flashlight and jacket.

All entrants received a "goodie bag" filled with educational material on fishing and recreational boating.

Wyatt Nesbitt puts on good show at the Ex

Winning trophies is nothing new for the Nesbitt family of Minden. Their Belgian horses nearly always figure somewhere in the top rankings wherever they compete. But for 17 year old Wyatt Nesbitt, competition at the Canadian National Exhibition in Toronto recently provided a special thrill. He was named Champion, Junior Showmanship, the top honour in that category, having won best Belgian showman last year.

To get to the final, Wyatt and Misty River Jamie, a three year old mare raised on the Nesbitt's farm near Minden, had to win the showmanship competition for the Belgian breed, then go head-to-head against the top finishers for the other three heavy horse classes — Clydesdale, Percheron and Shire.

What the judges assess is the competitor's ability to show his or her horse to best advantage.

Wyatt has been competing with his family's Belgians since he was eight or nine, says his grandfather, Sinc Nesbitt.

"It takes a lot of hard work," he says of Wyatt's accomplishment. "It's something that you work to achieve."

The next major competition for the Nesbitts is the Royal Winter Fair in November, where they once again hope to finish among the top competitors from across North America.

Hunter training dates announced

If you are a new hunter and wish to obtain an Ontario hunting licence for the first time, or have not held an Ontario hunting licence since January 1, 1968, you are required to complete a Hunter Training Course and successfully pass a hunting licence examination.

Hunter training courses will be held in September. Instructors should be contacted direct regarding dates and location of courses. Instructors in the Minden area are: Brian Austen, Minden, 286-4634; Wayne Wilson, Minden, 286-1123; Fred Rolfe, Kinmount, 488-2087; and Harley Collings, Norland 454-1982.

Hunting licence examinations will be given by appointment only and will commence on September 14th at the Minden and Haliburton offices of the Ministry of Natural Resources.

For a Hunting licence examination appointment contact: Ron MacKenzie, Ministry of Natural Resources, Haliburton, 705-457-2107.

Ways of dealing with deer population disputed

by LORRAYNE ANTHONY

Staff Reporter

"ONTARIO IS UP to its ears in white-tails", reads the headline from a hunting magazine. The reader wonders if the statement is true, and reads on to find out. In a sense it is: Ontario has a large white-tail deer population.

The Ministry of Natural Resources monitors the deer. "The population has tripled in the eighties, but for the first time in three years we've got the same count — it's steady," says Stan Flemming, the Fish and Wildlife supervisor for Minden district MNR.

The MNR and hunters find this to be good news, but to some conservationists, these high numbers indicate the intrinsic problem of hunting: it puts unnatural pressures on natural populations.

Conservationist R.D. Lawrence believes there should be a moratorium on hunting. "When there are high numbers of deer, the process of atrophy will take place naturally."

Mr. Lawrence is referring to the fact that when an area has reached its carrying capacity (the ability of the land to support a particular species in terms of food and habitat) female deer will produce fewer offspring.

"In less happy times, does will abort their offspring. But when times are good, does will have two or three fawns," Mr. Lawrence says.

But the MNR doesn't allow deer to go through "less happy times". During harsh winters when not much food is available for the deer, the MNR supplements their diets.

By killing deer, Mr. Lawrence believes hunters remove the most robust stock. "By hunting, humans are removing the best genes from the gene pool. In essence, we are reducing the gene pool."

Reducing the gene pool of a particular species indirectly reduces the species' chance for survival by causing less variability in a population. This causes a higher frequency of undesirable traits. In human populations, haemophilia and Tay-Sachs disease are examples of problems which can occur from reducing the gene pool.

"If we stopped hunting," says Mr. Lawrence, "the does would produce less young and only the old and sick would be removed from the herd. The population will find its own balance if left alone."

But most people who hunt deer do not think about the reduction of the genetic pool or the population reaching a balance. They think of hunting as a way of life.

Murray Scott has been hunting for 53 years. His great grandfather, his grandfather, his father, they all hunted. For his family it was the only way to eat. To Mr. Scott, hunting is a part of his heritage.

"Oh, it's in my blood," Mr. Scott says when asked how he became interested in hunting.

Mr. Scott takes offence at the comments of "so-called conservationists". "I'm a hunter, but I also think of myself as a conservationist. I darned near raised a fawn all by myself."

No sooner were the words spoken when he proudly displays a snapshot of a handsome young man (Mr. Scott a few years ago) embracing a fawn. He looks at the picture and starts laughing. "That little son-of-a-gun of a deer thought I was its mother."

He believes "good hunters are good conservationists. It is very simple. If you're not going to eat it, don't kill it."

He doesn't believe in waste. He remembers a family — a large family — who lived on the Irish Line. "It was just after the Depression, and they needed the food. Well, what happened was some other hunters shot a couple of deer and while they were getting them a moose came along. So they left the deer for the moose. That's such a waste."

When the family went out to hunt in the same area, the wildlife authorities caught them and took their rifle away. "That poor family was punished — when they really needed the food — when some wasteful hunters were to blame."

So it appears that even among hunters, the killing of white-tail deer is a controversial topic. Some do it for the sport, the recreation; for others it is the only way they know to make ends meet.

Although he thinks of hunting as wonderful part of his life, Mr. Scott doesn't believe it to be a form of recreation. "We never allow drinking in the woods. If you want to do that, you just wait till you get back to the camp. Drinking and hunting don't mix."

Mr. Scott isn't only strict about the "no drinking" rule. He believes hunters must exercise a great deal of care when out in the bush. "If there is ever a doubt — let it go. I've drilled it into the fellas. My grandson's dog was killed by careless hunters. There's just no excuse for that."

But what about the deer? With hunting, and all the revenue the sport collects, is the Ministry taking into account the effect of hunting on the deer?

The white-tail population, as well as many other animal populations, are affected by the MNR's policies, says Mr. Lawrence. He believes the clear-cutting of forests increases the deer population.

At first this seems almost a contradiction. By removing a forest, the place where deer live, how could the population increase? The clear-cutting of trees results in a lot of new growth and this low-lying brush serves as the perfect food source for deer. This abundance results in a high population of white-tail deer.

Mr. Flemming concurs. "Logging creates additional browse for deer by creating new browse through regeneration."

By clear-cutting a forest, Mr. Lawrence says, the MNR collects revenue not only from logging, but also from the increased number of hunting licenses sold due to the increased deer population.

Another problem with the MNR's management, Mr. Lawrence says, is hunting tags. Hunters are allowed by law to kill as many bucks as they can, but only a designated number of does are shot. "It should be the other way around. If you're trying to manage the herd, does should be hunted so they don't produce so many offspring."

In Minden district, roughly 5,000 doe tags are issued. A hunter receives a doe tag by applying for one when he or she purchases a hunting license. Then, through a lottery system, the doe tags are distributed to hunters.

"Last year we had 26,000 applicants for 2,000 tags," says Mr. Flemming. At $19.25 a license, hunting licenses turn out a tidy sum.

However, Mr. Lawrence points out the Ministry manages the deer population for a minority of the population of Ontario. "They can use all kinds of excuses, but when you get right down to it, it's not biological, it's not ecological, and it's not conservation. It is simply man's exploitation of a resource."

It makes you wonder why Ontario is up to its ears in white-tails.

World champion racer hails from Kennis Lake

by MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

The 1990 Formula 1 season came to crashing end for Larry Everitt — but he came out of it as the first Canadian winner of the World Series.

"I was going 150 miles per hour so a little mistake became a rather large one," the former owner of the Kennis Lake Marine said in a telephone interview, describing August 22nd's race in Rotterdam, Holland. "I hit a four-foot-high wave I didn't expect and the boat was stuffed — the bow headed straight into the water like a submarine. It's just like hitting a brick wall. I went from 150 mph to zero in about 20 feet."

Protected by his "safety cell" inside the boat, Everitt emerged sore but unscathed. And despite this spectacular finish (not spectacular in the way he would have wished), Everitt had garnered enough points to win the Formula 1 World Series.

The season started on a better note for Everitt, who now owns a marina in Peterborough, although his parents are still at Kennis Lake. His placings before Rotterdam were: Chattanooga, Tennessee, first; Cincinnati, Ohio, second; Valleyfield, Quebec, third; and Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, third.

"We use a V8 Johnson outboard with fuel injection and 450 horsepower — the boat's only 17 feet long and weighs 350 pounds," Everitt says of how a lot of power is packed into a small vehicle. He does most of the engine work himself and is assisted and accompanied by his crew chief, Robert Griffith of West Guilford.

Everitt and Griffith have been a team since 1985, when Everitt started racing after a few years away from the sport. In 1986 they won the Canadian Nationals, the 1987 North American cup, and the 1987 Everitt was the Canadian High Points Champion.

"It feels pretty good," Everitt says of his latest win, the first time a Canadian captured the title. "It's very hard to do."

So why does he do it? "Just because I can and it's something I've always wanted to do. And I guess it's a thrill."

"I hit a four-foot-high wave I didn't expect," Formula 1 racer Larry Everitt says of Rotterdam's race. "I went from 150 mph to zero in about 20 feet."

Advertising campaign will keep an eye on bad boaters

by MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

Haliburton may do well to take a page out of Muskoka's book and get tough on pesky boaters.

In a series of advertisements, the Muskoka Lakes Association has "launched a bold and assertive advertising campaign to make inconsiderate boaters aware that their actions are as socially unacceptable as drinking and driving," Norma Goodger said at Saturday's Kushog Lake Property Owners Association annual meeting at the Stanhope firehall.

If people see displays of bad boating behaviour, they are asked to take a picture of the boater. The offenders' pictures will then be published in an ad entitled "Ships of Fools." Some of the headings for the original ads were "Smile, Stupid, You're on Candid Camera" and "Ever Notice How One Jerk in a Big Noisy Boat Can Spoil an Entire Weekend?"

"People have a right to expect a peaceful lake environment and threats to that right from irresponsible boating can be stopped," Goodger said of the campaign.

The Federation of Ontario Cottagers' Associations, FOCA, is now looking at copying the campaign on lakes across the province. Kushog wants to have something in place by spring.

Goodger believes that only public education and peer pressure can solve the problem. "I strongly feel that since no legislation exists to control the operation of these boats, and I feel it should not exist, the best way to minimize the intrusion of these boats on our lives is to encourage the operators to act in a responsible manner, with consideration for other users of our lakes."

Taking part in public education is the Canadian Safe Boating Council, on which Goodger represents FOCA. It will collaborate with members from various sectors to promote and develop safe, enjoyable recreational boating.

One woman in the audience asked if Stanhope's noise by-law could be used to discourage bad boating behaviour. The problem is enforcement, Deputy-reeve Ann Barker and Goodger said. The OPP is short staffed and has only one patrol boat.

"We're going around and around in circles," Barker said, before reminding people that if they want charges laid against a problem boater, "you have to be prepared to go to court about it."

Planning for the future just part of the new role

by MICHAEL McHUGH
Staff Reporter

Haliburton County's new Department of Planning and Economic Development is making plans for the future.

Opened July 23rd, the department's main goal is to provide a framework to enable the County to better coordinate planning and economic development.

"My main priority is to execute directions given to me by the county," says Mark Stagg, the county's new planner and economic development officer. Until now, Stagg says the county has lacked an overall, comprehensive approach to planning and development. As the name suggests, this presently one-man department will have two main goals.

On the planning side, the first priority is creating, in conjunction with county council, the county's Official Plan.

"I have to identify what has to be done, and how, within certain budget constraints," he says.

Stagg, who drew up the official plan for the regional municipality of Waterloo in the 1970s, has been touring the county holding meetings with each of the 10 municipalities, exchanging ideas and concerns that the two levels have. Currently, only three municipalities, Dysart et al, Cardiff and Anson, Hindon and Minden have official plans, and part of Stagg's job is to ensure these plans jive with the county's direction.

"Planning is a process everyone engages in," he said.

Spatial development, resource utilization, community stability and environmental protection are four areas of concern the department hopes to address while formulating an official plan.

"The social, economical, and ecological factors that affect the quality of life and natural balance in the county area" form the basis of planning initiatives, he says. For example, an official plan would identify quantity and location of cottage development with respect to these factors.

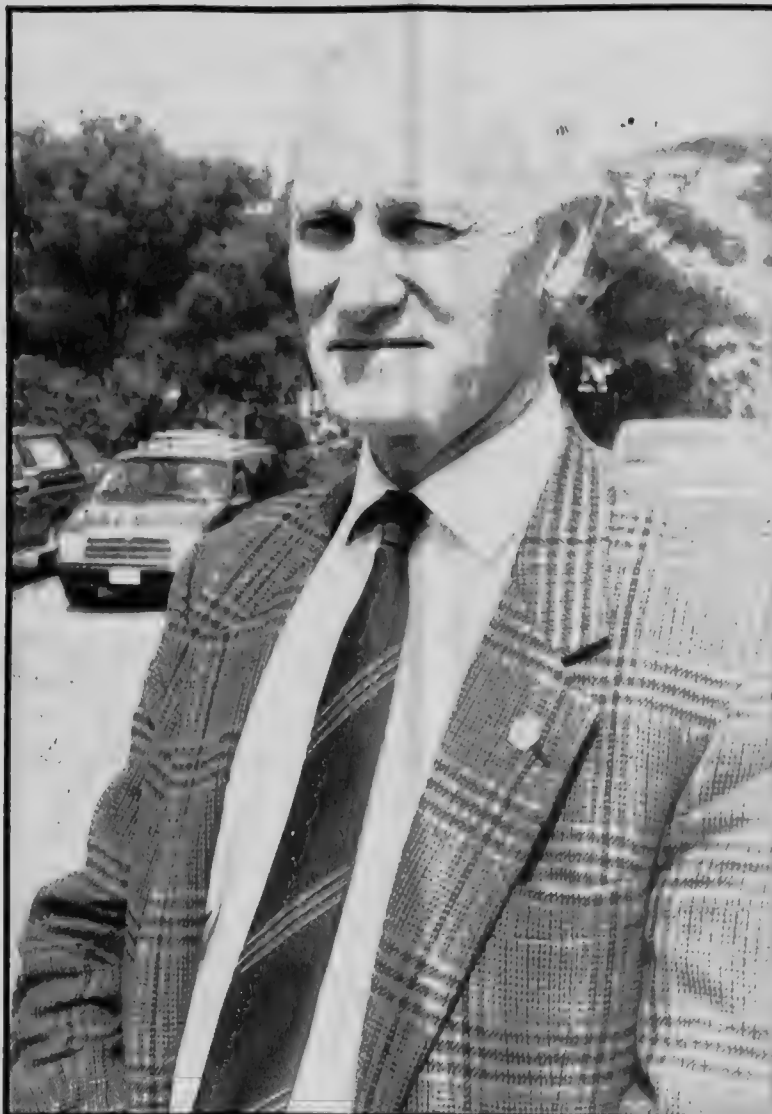

"Planning evolves as an agent of change," he says, and the new department hopes to create a "process to allow for efficient and decent decision-making."

As well, the new department is saddled with the task of incorporating federal and provincial planning policies and priorities into Haliburton's own planning strategy. Some areas of provincial concern include proper flood plain management, preservation and use of aggregate resources, such as sand and gravel, affordable housing considerations, along with the Ministry of Natural Resources guidelines about protecting fish habitats and deer sheds.

On the other side of the office, Stagg, a one-man department, is also responsible for responding to the particular economic concerns of the county, and hopes to move from a reactive role, to a more proactive one.

"It's a logical progression to move from responding to the needs of people to building and reaching out on our own initiative, promoting the assets of the county to businesses, either planning to relocate or establish branch plants or new businesses" in the county, he says.

Stagg will present his recommendations on how the county should proceed to Haliburton's planning committee, which will then advise county council. Since the department is only six weeks old, Stagg was uncertain of the size of budget he will have.

PREPARING FOR THE FUTURE: Mark Stagg is the county's new planner and economic development officer, and will work on the Official Plan

High costs prompt Chamber to discontinue MTO office

by MARTHA PERKINS
Editor

It is no longer economically feasible for the Haliburton Highlands Chamber of Commerce to operate the Ministry of Transportation's licensing office.

"Salary for the clerk was $15,000 and the office was bringing in $14,000," says the Chamber's president, Lyn Stevens. The MTO facilities also took up valuable office space and the Chamber had to rent storage space elsewhere. Hydro costs also went up as a result of the MTO office.

"It was just posing too many problems," Stevens says of their decision to close the MTO office.

Control of the office duties will be once again put up for tender, and Stevens says it will be a positive move if it goes back into the private sector. She also hopes the successful candidate will hire on the Chamber's clerk. Nearly all of the clerk's time was spent on MTO duties, although the Chamber had originally hoped she'd be able to spend half her time working on Chamber business.

The date of the changeover is not yet known.

"Now we'll just direct our energies into getting people up here," Stevens says.

Employment given help

More than half a million dollars has been granted to Haliburton County for employment and business-related programs.

Federal funding of $396,704 under the Canadian Jobs Strategy will allow the Sir Sandford Fleming College in Haliburton to continue its Job Entry program for a third year.

And a further $142,625 will go towards the fourth year of operation of a Business Development Centre under Community Futures, a division of the Canadian Jobs Strategy.

This Sir Sandford project accommodates two intakes of fifteen unemployed workers, of which 10 will be social assistance recipients. Both groups will receive 25 weeks of specialized training to prepare candidates for clerical and office-related jobs at the entry level.

"This project combines practical, sound training with job placement rates that have been consistently impressive," MP Bill Scott said in a press release.

Participants will be individually assessed to determine aptitudes, experience and academic levels, and will receive a combination of life skills and practical training. General office procedures, typing, basic computer training, and sales desk skills will be emphasized. Academic upgrading is to be provided where appropriate.

The five-week job placement component of the project allows participants to gain valuable practical experience. Brief work-terms with local employers will further develop the clerical and retail skills gained during practical training.

"The continuation of this project will allow more Haliburton residents to qualify for employment, and to stay employed," Mr. Scott added.

One of the objectives of the Job Entry program is to assist people facing significant barriers to finding and maintaining employment. It provides employment preparation and life skills guidance to help them become ready for work. Participants may be eligible for financial support while receiving training and on-the-job experience.

A 'no' GST message

percent on every dollar puts a multitude of goods and services right out of reach of low and middle income families?

Maybe if the government got the message that a more suitable solution to the growing national deficit would be for senators, M.P.s, etc., to stop voting themselves raises, and multi-million dollar pensions; if they took fewer sight-seeing tours on us; stopped granting monies for studies of the mating habits of the tse-tse fly in Lower Mongolia; stopped calling for multi-million dollar government studies that are printed on tomes of glitzy paper, by experts whose advice is then promptly ignored . . . and the list goes on.

So tell me, please somebody, if the federal government is hearing hundreds of thousands of people in order to explain, implement and collect this tax; placing full page ads in every imaginable publication from B.C. to Newfoundland; and sending every available politician on a cross country promotional campaign, what are they going to do with the $1.98 they net at the end of the first-year? Cut a women's program?

POINTS OF VIEW

Tree decline evident here

tent caterpillars came through in their normal infestation taking every leaf of every tree, disappearing almost completely after the third year. Again in the 1950s the same thing happened.

In neither of these infestations was there any marked decline in the forest as a whole. Individual trees which were weak or unthrifty died but healthy trees seemed if anything to thrive better in succeeding years, probably due to the fertilization of the caterpillar droppings. Not only that, but in mixed forest, with an evergreen understory, the young evergreens leaped up in a surge of growth during the years of infestation. The two factors involved in this surge of growth were probably: a) the increased sunlight reaching them in June in their period of rapid growth due to the defoliation of deciduous trees overhead; and b) again the factor of fertilization from the caterpillar droppings.

I consider the two infestations referred to to be of significant value in assessing what has happened during and after more recent infestations. First of all, I do not now note any great surge of growth among the evergreens which the caterpillars do not touch. Second the deciduous trees seem unable to shake off the effects of defoliation. Not only do individual trees die at a much greater rate, but the forest as a whole looks sick and unthrifty. This is true of evergreens and deciduous trees alike. Just how great this unthriftness really is was drawn to my attention during a trip to British Columbia in the summer of 1989. As I drove through Vancouver Island and parts of the mainland I literally marvelled at the abounding good health of the forest in comparison with my observations of my own forest in Haliburton County.

To me the evidence is clear.

Something has changed since the early 1950s — a change which is nothing short of a disaster for our local forests. I believe the tent caterpillars are a natural part of nature's processes by which the weak and unfit are weeded out. Something that is not part of the natural processes is to blame I believe for the large scale general decline of our forests.

What has changed since the early 1950s? The climate is not changed to any great extent — not yet anyway. Amount of rain and sunshine have been reasonably consistent. The gypsy moth, though new, has not made any great inroads locally. The number of cars and people have increased, but if those factors were to blame we could expect to find greater decline along highways and near human habitation. Such localized decline is not in evidence so far as I can see. The decline is general.

By this process of elimination I conclude that the only factor which could cause such large scale general decline is atmospheric pollution of some kind. There is no real doubt in my mind the culprit is acid rain.

The one factor which has changed since the 1950s has been the erection of the super high chimney at Inco's smelter at Sudbury in the late 1960s. Every man working on that chimney knew they were simply spreading Sudbury's long-time pollution over a greater area than before by the erection of that chimney. That chimney is the largest single source of pollution in North America, perhaps in the world, spewing millions upon millions of tons of sulphuric acid into the air since its erection.

You can bring on all the fancy charts you wish to try to prove to me that the winds bring our acid rain up from the United States. No doubt that is the origin of some of it. However, the evidence I see points to an increasing decline at an exponential rate in our forests ever since the high chimney at Sudbury went into use. I'm not interested any more in expensive studies (paid for by taxpayers) in an attempt to find the culprit in forest decline. The proof may never be conclusive.

What should be done is to shut down International Nickel until they prove they are not causing the decline. The burden of proof is in the wrong place. Average persons like myself should not have to prove Inco is at fault. The onus should be the other way around with Inco proving it is not at fault.

If this causes the shares of Inco to decline in value should I weep bitter tears? This multinational company has taken billions of dollars out of Canada leaving damage that cannot be undone for many lifetimes.

If I went into the head office of Inco and did several thousand dollars worth of vandalism I could expect to be arrested. Every year Inco sneaks on to my property and does several thousand dollars worth of damage with the acid rain it produces. Our gutless governments have connived with Inco to keep the damage occurring.

It is long past time to stop the vandalism.

Declined ballots

To the Editor:

Congratulations on the splendid All Candidates Meeting. Re Harvey Clarke's column last week in which he discussed ways of showing support to all those who contributed and worked so hard for the hospital extension, and to the laid-off workers of Martin Lumber, in the coming election, by sending a strong message to Queen's Park.

Mr. Clarke suggests spoiling the ballot in effect voting for "none of the above". A better way, (which I discovered while listening to a CBC phone-in program) would be to receive your ballot from the officer and then to give it back asking for it to be placed in the "Declined Ballot" box. These "Declined Ballots" must be counted and recorded by law.

This will convey the electorate's strong disapproval, if that is what is desired.

Joan M. Hoad,
Haliburton

To the Editor:

Countless times in the past few months have I encountered individuals upset with the government and their handlings of a vast array of issues whether that may be in Ottawa, Toronto, or here at home.

Many of these people stated that they have grown tired or disgruntled with the state of things and, as protest, planned not to vote in the provincial election.

This rejection of the right to vote is not "sending a message" to those in power but instead denounces the fundamental privilege of life within a democracy.

One vote may seem insignificant, but it is a voice in the discussions that shape our lives. Citizens living under dictatorial regimes yearn for such a right to be heard.

Certainly, in our society there exist severe problems that must be addressed. Obviously, this is a time for us to assert our concerns, and not a time for political apathy!

First Impressions...

When Alex Kundoch heard Haliburton's population was only 1,500, 'I wanted to die.' But after two weeks here, the German Rotary exchange student's first opinion has changed. 'I love Canada, I love Haliburton, I love the people.'

by MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

IT WAS ALREADY enough of an adjustment of expectations. At first, Alexandra Kundoch was told she'd spend her year as a Rotary exchange student in the United States. But America had too many applicants so Canada was chosen as second best. Told she'd be living in Toronto, Alex spent months dreaming of all the things she'd do in Canada's largest city.

Then another phone call came. Now she'd be living in this place called Haliburton. At least she could find it on the map at home. She wasn't as lucky on the Monday afternoon she went to the telegraph office to send the message she'd be arriving that Friday. The clerk could find Alex's own village of 200 inhabitants in the world directory, but not this Haliburton. Was she sure it was a real place?

And then, after a few harrowing minutes at the Toronto airport when she thought no one was there to greet her, she was being driven to Haliburton, only to be told its winter population was 1,500.

"I really wanted to die," Alex remembers of that moment in the car. "Why me? When I was told I'd be going to Toronto in April, I was always thinking of my life in Toronto and what I was going to do. Then somebody tells you you have to live in a small village. To me it was like my death."

Yet Alex has lived to tell the tale, and after only 14 days here, uses the most glowing descriptions to do so. "What can I say? I love Canada, I love Haliburton, I love the people."

What caused such a turnaround? First of all, she has discovered that in Canada, small towns actually have things such as stores and theatres and restaurants and schools. In her hometown of Rohlshagen near Hamburg, there are only houses. It's in the city of 30,000 five minutes away that you do the other kinds of living. Secondly there's the remarkable discoveries she's made about the friendliness of the people who have already welcomed her into their hearts.

"I really love huggies," she says of this newfound greeting. "More and more I like it — you get closer to a person."

"I think if we had huggies in Germany, we would be other people."

You see, it's not only because Alex wants to explore another culture she became an exchange student; she not too fond of the country she left behind.

"I don't like Germany, really, I must say," a perfectly relaxed and at home Alex says as she props her bare feet up on the railing of Doug and Ruth Mitchell's porch. This is only her second day at this Haliburton home, yet "I feel I have lived here for longer. I don't feel like an exchange student."

Could it be because Alex and her host sister, Krista, sometimes look like real sisters? Or that Alex thinks she first met Krista when the Haliburton teenager was an exchange student in Germany last year? Or that Alex had an intuitive yearning to come to Canada?

First, a little background.

Alex and her parents, Renate and Siegfried, 19-year-old sister Claudia and 21-year-old brother Benjamin (she pronounces it Benyameen) live in Rohlshagen with 200 other people. Her father started out as a businessman, hated it and became a trucker, with nearby Hamburg as a base. Her mother volunteers for the German Red Cross.

Like many teens, Alex doesn't always get along with her family. Going to another country seemed the perfect way to avoid arguments and since the age of 12, Alex has been dreaming of how she could do this.

A friend told her about the Rotary exchange, and last summer, Alex began talking to a neighbour, a Rotarian, about it. He told her to fill out an application, which she did, stating her first preference was the United States.

"It's not just 'Ah, America,'" she says of the attraction. "I wanted to go to the States because it's so different than Germany."

On the way to her Rotary interview, Alex's stomach was in knots. Her sister Claudia knew "when I eat chocolate, my nerves get better." So they pulled over and went into a store, where Claudia bought Alex a chocolate egg. Inside was a tiny little man, who looks like a flattened football player. During the interview, Alex kept her hand in her pocket, clutching her talisman.

A few days before Christmas, at five after eight in the evening, the Kundochs' telephone rang. It was one of the Rotarians who had interviewed Alex. "He asked me if I knew what I was getting for Christmas. I thought this was strange. Then he said 'I have a present for you. You can go to the States. . . Are you still on the telephone?'"

Alex's elation had temporarily affected her ability to talk. "It was so wonderful," Alex says, instantly crediting her little good luck token. After she gets up to show it to you — of course it also made the journey across the Atlantic — Alex gives you more proof of its powers. Claudia had the little man with her when she wrote her end-of-school exams and did very well. Alex forgot him and failed her biology exam. She looks down at the talisman with fondness. "I will never lose him."

It was in April she was told there were too many students wanting to go to America and Alex had half an hour to choose someplace else. "The problem was I was alone in the house, there was no one to help me." In earlier conversations about where she could go, her mother's choice was Canada, her father's was South America, her sister's was Australia and her brother's was South Africa. Alex instantly rejected the two males' suggestions: "There are just rich and poor people there and because I would surely live with the rich people, I wouldn't go there."

"I decided to go to Canada. I hear a lot of what my mother says — we have the same likes."

Canada it was, and Toronto it was going to be. Or so she thought. In July, she was told her exchange year was to be in Haliburton. "Oh God, I hope I can find it on the map," she said. "It was there so I thought it must be a big town if it's on our map. It's not too small, so it was okay."

She was a bit worried when the telegraph officer didn't find Haliburton in his book. They sent the telegraph saying she'd arrive at the airport four days later anyway, hoping someone would receive it and respond.

After so much hurrying to get ready, and so many hours on the plane, Alex was very tired and hot when she arrived at the airport. Peering at the sea of faces waiting at the arrival window, she looked in vain for someone holding a card with her name. Then her luggage didn't seem to arrive. But finally, with the help of a Rotary representative, Alex was linked with her luggage and Krista, and Gary and Dawn Brohman who were there to greet her.

Krista was a welcome sight. At 18, she's very close in age to Alex, who turned 16 in June. As well, Krista learned to speak German in her year away, and Alex didn't have to feel foolish practicing her English.

'East Germans were crying to make something with their country, a new life, a new politic and suddenly they all run away ... That's not what we wanted to achieve.'

She did feel slightly foolish when she realized that a small town in Germany was not like a small town in Canada. "I said 'This cannot be Haliburton'," surprised to find it bustling with activities and its streets full of commerce. "Since I've arrived, I've just had fun. I never thought I'd have so much fun in just a small village."

One of the families she's befriended is the Haedickes, who own Halimar Lodge. The Haedickes' home town is not far from Alex's. "The world is really small."

Home for a few days was at Langdons, where Alex savoured being able to walk across the garden and arrive at Lake Kashagawigamog for a swim. (Alex can say Kashagawigamog almost like a native.) Now at Mitchells, she's learning all distances can't be measured by a few steps: The family took Alex to a wedding in Thunder Bay on the weekend. "It's going to take 16 hours to get there," she says in disbelief.

Although snowbirds may find this unbelievable, one of the things Alex is looking forward to is winter. "The last real winter in Germany was in 1979," she says. Since then, it has been untypically wet and warm. "We know it's because of pollution but some people don't want to realize it. . . People see what happens and say it's bad but no one does anything against it."

Even summer isn't the way it used to be. At the first of August, the temperature went up to 40 degrees Celsius, even though it rarely goes beyond 28 or, at maximum, 30 degrees. And it's been "raining, raining, raining."

Winter means snow and snow usually means skiing, a sport which Alex doesn't have fond memories

"There are so many problems now," she says, admitting that while at her age, many teenagers talk more about boys and music, there is an awareness of what's happening politically and socially.

"Sometimes you think it's so stupid. People discuss problems they shouldn't be discussing." Asked for an example, Alex learns the English word for abortion. "This is not the problem we must talk about."

"We have a lot of unemployment. A lot of East Germans come here to get a job, get money, and get an apartment, but that's not what we wanted to achieve. We wanted them to start a new life in their own country — that's what most people were dreaming of."

"I think it's better East Germany is its own country. I feel unification can't work. In November, my dad was saying they'd make them West German too and that's what's happened."

Because East German professionals are well trained — "they learned better because they had to" — many have been quitting jobs and accepting ones in West Germany. Now there's a shortage of doctors and nurses in East German hospitals, and West Germans are having to fill them.

"They were crying all the time to make something with their country, a new life, a new politic, and suddenly they all run away."

Another issue the country has to deal with is the build up of nuclear arms.

"The government decides for 65 million people what's good and what's bad. They are all talking of peace but they still have things like (nuclear arms). They are all thinking still like war."

Is this just youthful idealism speaking, she's asked. "I can't imagine in the next years I'll change my mind. Some people think it's naive. But nuclear arms can't be right. (However,) I'm the only one in my family fighting against it."

"I'm just a small person and no one's interested in my opinion so I can just tell people in Canada what I am thinking."

Politically, Alex says she's a Social Democrat. She doesn't like Helmut Kohl, but she doesn't like the Greens, the environmental activism party, either.

Germans must be aware of past

"The Greens are too radical and it won't function. I think it's good what they are saying, but they want too much too fast."

A political movement to fear, however, is the resurgence of the Nazi party.

"We learned about the war at school," Alex says of her growing awareness of Germany's past. The movies she saw made her want to reject everything Adolf Hitler stood for, but not everyone feels that way.

"We will never lose the mark of Adolf Hitler. It's like a scar on the face because it's so bad." By learning about him the way she did at school — being made to realize how easily he could manipulate people and how easily it still is to manipulate people — she and her classmates could recognize the atrocities for what they are.

"Hitler started in a positive way — he gave everyone holidays, which they had never had before — but that's not what he wanted to achieve." The legacy lives on in a growing neo-Nazi movement.

"We have a lot of problems with people who think the way Hitler did. This is the problem we must talk about, not abortion."

As Alex grows older, it's more important to her that people listen to her opinions. Right now, she can express them well in German, and by the end of her year here, she hopes she can make herself as well understood in English.

Recognizing that a year away from home will probably change her, Alex also is interested in finding out whether any of her opinions will change — and how.

Of one thing she's sure: her opinion of Haliburton will be so good, she won't want to leave.

Read all about it: Literacy campaign takes to the streets

In celebration of the 25th Anniversary of World Literacy Day on September the Haliburton Highlands Literacy Program will be having a display on the main street in Haliburton on Saturday Sept. 8.

In Ontario, 1.6 million adults (one out of every four people) are functionally illiterate. In other words, they might not understand the directions on a medicine bottle, or be able to read their telephone bill, make correct change or fill out a deposit slip at the bank. These people may include a member of your family, a friend, neighbour, or someone you work with. People who have problems with their reading and writing skills may not be able to access the opportunities they are entitled to such as writing an apprenticeship test, applying for a job or reading this article.

The Haliburton Highlands Literacy Program presently has 16 volunteer tutors throughout the county who are matched with a student. They meet once a week at a place and time that is convenient to both. All tutors are trained and all information is kept confidential.

'It must have been something that just clicked,' says Lynnette Simmons, standing beside her husband Neville. Since 1956 when they were both Girl Guides, Mrs. Simmons and Karen Dunsmore (seated with husband Don and wearing Guide sweatshirts), the two women have been forging the bonds of friendship through time.

Friendship transcends borders and time for two former Girl Guides

by MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

IN AN OLD BOX filled with childhood mementoes, or perhaps stitched onto a fraying blanket, one can probably find Karen Dunsmore's Commonwealth badge. A symbol of achievement, the badge was just one of the rewards of being part of the Girl Guide movement.

But the badge is not just a relic from the past. It lives on, in a way not imagined by Mrs. Dunsmore when she sought ways to earn it.

Written in the handbook were the instructions the young Haliburton Guide was to follow. She needed a Guide in another Commonwealth country to tell her about its Guiding history and its attributes. A leader gave her the name of a young Australian Guide named Lynnette, and young Karen (she was a Robertson at that time) sent off her request. The year was 1956.

Lynnette (she's now Lynnette Simmons) mailed Karen a box chock full of fascinating tidbits and souvenirs from Australia, guaranteeing Karen success with her badge. Karen wrote back, thanking Lynnette for responding with such enthusiasm. Lynnette wrote back, thanking Karen for the thanks and telling her a bit more about her life in Australia. And so it continued.

Thirty-four years later, Lynnette and her husband Neville Simmons are sitting on porch at Karen and Don Dunsmore's summer home, being refreshed by the slight breeze from Lake Kashagawigamog. They've just arrived — after a 36-hour flight — to celebrate the Dunsmores' 25th anniversary.

Amazingly, after 34 years the two former Guides are best of friends, sisters almost. Perhaps still more amazing is that in those three decades, they've only met face to face three times: in 1966, 1977 and now, in 1990. Yet Mrs. Dunsmore is the godmother of the Simmons' oldest boy — he was born during the Dunsmores' 1966 visit to Australia — and Mrs. Simmons is the Dunsmores' oldest boy's godmother. He was born on Mrs. Simmons' 30th birthday.

"It must have been something that just clicked," says Mrs. Simmons, looking remarkably bright-eyed after just a few hours sleep, of their odd friendship.

"I really liked you and we had the same interests," Mrs. Dunsmore adds, also trying to find clues to the friendship's longevity. "We both really put an effort into keeping the relationship going."

"The beauty was our mothers started to write to one another," Mrs. Simmons rejoins. If the girls went too many weeks without strengthening the bonds by writing, their mothers were sure to remind them.

There's also the fact that both women are gregarious, warm-hearted and friend-loving. The anniversary celebration gathered people from across the country and points abroad. And when the Simmons had an eight-hour stopover in Vancouver, they were taken out to dinner by friends of the Dunsmores, who had visited the Simmons when in Australia a few years ago.

"We're really good at networking," says Mrs. Dunsmore, who lives most of the year in Montreal yet maintains strong ties with Haliburton. It's as if they take one flower off a flowering tree and plant it somewhere else. It blossoms, and another flower is transplanted.

In trying to understand how such a long-distance friendship can work so well, you have to go back to when it first began. Karen was an only child, and Lynnette had just one brother. They each wanted a sister and this way they had the best of both worlds: the closeness between sisters without the fights over whose blouse was whose, who wasn't being fair, who always got permission to do anything she wanted.

"We've never gone through the nitty gritty," Mrs. Dunsmore says. "Everything's always been on a positive note."

At first they talked/wrote a lot about Girl Guides and its activities, such as camping. (Because she had only boys, Mrs. Dunsmore is not involved in Guiding but she and her husband are leaders of a Boy Scout pack.) Gifts were exchanged and coveted, the letters looked forward to with anticipation.

"It was almost a status symbol for me," says Mrs. Simmons. "And it was just the thrill of going to the letter box and finding a letter from Canada there."

Ten years after they first started writing, Karen and her new husband Don decided to spend their vacation in Australia and New Zealand. After a 1,000 mile train ride, they arrived in Jindalee, the Simmons' home near Brisbane. When the two penpals actually met face to face, it wasn't as strangers.

"You were just as I pictured you," says Mrs. Dunsmore, to which Mrs. Simmons adds "It was a very warm feeling, it didn't feel strange. You do feel you know a person."

Not only were they fortunate in finding out they liked each other just as much in person, but their husbands also become friends. That put a final seal

Women to march to protest violence

FOR THE PAST 11 YEARS communities around the world have been gathering on September 15th to protest violence against women and children. This event is called "Take Back the Night."

The first Take Back the Night March was in Germany in 1978 when 3,000 women marched in protest against rape and violence against women. Since then, annual marches have been held in France, Canada and the United States. In Canada, marches have been held in 43 major Canadian cities as well as in small towns and villages across the country. September 15, 1990 will be the first Take Back the Night March to be held by women in Haliburton County.

Violence against women and children is a frightening and an ever increasing reality in our communities today. It keeps women in a state of fear; it governs

'The march by itself will not end violence against women, but will send a message that violence is pervasive and affects women every day, and especially every night of their lives.'

how and when they walk and; determines where they live and work. Remaining confined in their homes is not a solution. Take Back the Night provides women with an opportunity to send a strong message throughout our community that violence against women and children is not acceptable and will no longer be tolerated.

The Haliburton County Take Back the Night march will begin at 8:00 p.m. on September 15 at the Agnes Jamison Gallery on Bobcaygeon Road in Minden. The committee for the march has planned to have two speakers and then a candlelight march through downtown Minden ending with a celebration and refreshments back at the starting point. The evening will end at approximately 9:30 p.m. All women in Haliburton County are urged to participate in the March.

The committee members believe that the march by itself will not end violence against women, but it will send the message that battering, sexual harassment and rape are not isolated individual problems, but are pervasive ones which affect women every day, and especially every night of their lives.

On male participation: Take Back the Night is an opportunity for women to protest violence against women. Because men are not subjected to the same treatment that women are, it is not necessary for them to Take Back the Night. By participating in the march, women are making a statement that as a united group we can walk at night without male protection. The committee recognizes that many men are concerned about the issue of violence against women. The committee encourages men to show their support by providing child care so that women may attend the March or by attending the evening but by not participating in the March itself.

Women participating in the march are asked to bring a candle. If unable to attend, women are encouraged to show their support by lighting a candle in their windows.

For further information about the march or the evening's events, please contact Annegreth Gerrard at 457-3355 or Beth Zwecher 286-4897.

Guiding ends but friendship doesn't

Given the distance between the two countries, the next time they saw each other was 1977, when the Dunsdales lived in Saskatoon. (The Simmons are hearty travellers indeed because they bussed two-thirds of the way across Canada with their two young sons.) The Simmons were in Saskatoon for the birth of the Dunsdales' third son.

During this visit, the friends found there were some differences between them: "Lynnette is a professional seamstress. She was shocked she couldn't find a needle in my house. I didn't know if I had one," Mrs. Dunsdale says, laughing.

Then it became time for the second generation to carry on the friendship tradition.

"When our sons Stephen and Paul finished school when they were 17, they had a choice," Mr. Simmons says. "Most children at that age want their own vehicle. We said 'Would you like us to help you buy a car or would you like to visit Aunt Karen and Uncle Don?' They both chose to come here — in the long run I think they knew they'd get a car anyway."

"It was quite an experience for them because they came over here for a white Christmas," says Mrs. Simmons, who has never even touched snow. This hospitality was reciprocated when the Dunsdales' two oldest boys, Andrew and James, spent Christmas 1987 at the Simmons' while taking part in an international Scout Jamboree. In March, Stephen is getting married and his godmother hopes to attend, while Mr. Dunsdale and son Jonathon go to the international jamboree in Korea.

At first the Simmons wanted this visit to be a surprise, but they were afraid the Dunsdales would celebrate their anniversary by flying to Australia and they'd pass each other somewhere over the Pacific. They did manage to keep one part of their visit a surprise, however.

During the interview, Mr. Simmons hands the visiting reporter a note. Twenty-five years ago, he writes, they received a boxed piece of the Dunsdales' wedding cake. They kept it, brought it with them, and hope to make it part of a time capsule which won't be opened for another 25 years.

What these friends have kept over the years is incredible. Using the remnants from her wedding dress, Mrs. Simmons made Mrs. Dunsdale a dress, which she still has. When Mrs. Simmons takes the mail from her box, the metal letters reading Simmons were gifts from Mrs. Dunsdale. Mrs. Simmons even has a plant Mrs. Dunsdale sent to her a few years ago when Mrs. Simmons was very ill. "Every time I water it I say 'I know where I got that.'"

"We have such an emotional investment, I can't see ever being let go," Mrs. Dunsdale says. Asked to describe the friendship, she uses the words "love, concern, caring, enjoyment excitement."

The power of the written word has been well documented before. In this friendship, the written word has given birth to deep-felt emotions which can never be described.

Families flock to Kinmount for fun at fair

For more pictures and story, see page 24

COMMUNITY NEWS

A familiar face at the Kinmount fair is Sinc Nesbitt, below. But those who don't share his expertise at the reigns could pet smaller versions of Nesbitt's show horses. And many of the rides were geared to the smaller set.

Kinmount Fair appeals to all

IF YOU WEREN'T at the Kinmount Fair on the weekend, you were probably one of the few people in the entire area who missed this popular Labour Day extravaganza. "There was a record crowd," organizer Guy Scott says. With the theme of Year of the Child, the fair seemed to attract every child — and their parents. "We have so much entertainment. There was something going on in every nook and cranny," Scott says. A huge kiddie land allowed children to get ride of some of their energy before they listened to Jim Parker of Mr. Dress Up fame. "It's more like a picnic than a fair," Scott adds about the Kinmount Fair's overall appeal. "People can sit under the trees and watch the world go by.

It's an atmosphere — the old-fashioned Sunday afternoon atmosphere."

Along with the record crowds were a record number of entrants in the cattle show, especially since organizers opened up more youth categories to complement the fair's theme. Close to 400 cattle were judged.

Although all results are not yet available, here are some of the winners of the main events: Queen of the Fair was Zoie Rolfe of Kinmount, with Kinmount's Jennifer Greer as the princess. In the heavy horse draw, Scott Nesbitt's team from Minden was the winner. Minden's Dave Sisson was the winner in the light horse draw. The demolition derby on Sunday was won by Steve Woodward of Pefferlaw.

Wilberforce centenarian is honoured at CNE Warriors Day

WILBERFORCE NEWS

by: WINNIE SCHOFIELD

On Warrior's Day at the C.N.E. this year, when hundreds of people sat waiting in the Grandstand for the annual parade, a Rolls Royce drove in and paused at the stand where the occupants were welcomed and introduced to the public as three veterans from the first World War. All of them had reached the age of one hundred. One of the men was Charlie Morris, a popular senior who lived in Wilberforce for many years and now is a resident of West Hill. Charlie received the warm response from the crowd with a friendly wave to all.

Ruth Fiddler wonders how many heard the bagpipes at Lake Wilbermere on Sat. morning of Aug. 25th. Ruth and Dennis, her husband, who had been shaving at the time, hurried outside to see what it was all about. They were surprised to see a parade of about forty people heading their way. Turned out to be a birthday surprise for Dennis and his twin sister Mary, arranged by family members and friends. Mary had been aroused at six a.m. in the morning and she had joined in the procession. Included in the group were the Fiddler children, four sons and two daughters and seventeen grandchildren. Two of the sons came from Alberta for the celebration. Perfect weather contributed to this glorious family reunion which lasted for three days at the Fiddler home on the Lake, making many happy, lasting memories.

Violet Bowen, that courageous little lady who will be 95 in December, has had to face another hardship when she slipped on a rug and shattered a bone in her leg. With her leg in a cast she is presently a patient in the Haliburton Hospital. In spite of aches and pains Violet is anxious to be up and about and keeps thinking of that large quilt at home that is waiting to be put together. Violet specializes in quilts and has completed many fine ones in the past. She appreciates all the lovely cards received. We hope her stay in the hospital will be a short one and that she will soon be able to resume her busy life in the comfort of her beloved little home.

THE DEPARTMENT'S PRIDE: Last week, the Monmouth Volunteer Fire Department received its brand new pumper truck, which replaces its 23-year-old truck.

Most of the $85,143 pricetag was garnered by selling the old hall, but the municipality kicked in about $15,000.

EASY ONE DAY PROJECTS TO HELP SAVE YOU MONEY AND ELECTRICITY.

There is a lot of pride in doing projects around the home that not only improve its look but also save you money. The following projects can be done by the "do-it-yourself" crowd over the weekend with very little effort. Once completed, they help you save electricity and lower your heating costs.

INSTALL AN ENERGY EFFICIENT SHOWER HEAD

For most families, showers are the single largest users of hot water. A good quality energy-efficient showerhead can reduce the amount of hot water used for a shower from 50% to 75%.

LEAKING TAPS

One drop per second wastes 800 litres (175 gallons) of hot water per month. Worn tap washers are usually the culprit and are easy and inexpensive to replace.

INSULATION

Insulate your hot water pipe from your water heater and pipes that pass through cold or unheated areas. The two basic types of pipe insulation are wrapped or slip-on. Both are easy to install and available in hardware or home improvement stores.

HEAT TRAPS

With any water heater, heat from the tank will move up the hot water supply line when the water is not being used. This pipe will be hot to the touch at all times and will waste heat continuously. To stop all loss install a heat trap. REMEMBER this requires some plumbing changes.

If you would like more information on other ways to use your energy more efficiently, give us a call.

Ice cream delights

SENIOR LEAGUE

by: WINNIFRED BARNUM

Hello all readers. Again it's Thursday, tea party day. We certainly enjoyed the delicious lunch provided and served by the Catholic church ladies of Kinmount: Aileen Brown, Rita Lockhart, Anne Cain and Madeline Pearson. We thank you ever so much, and also Father Felix for playing the piano and singing. We appreciate Jean Taylor, Nora Groves and Mary Smith for setting up the table.

Mary Oliver's niece came to visit her Friday, and in the afternoon was Happy Hour. The entertainment was Mike and Connie Biagi, Frank Faulkner and Doris on the piano. Ellen Holden, Mary Guillemen and Dorothy Milne took care of the residents and their visitors. We thank you very much. Among the visitors were Linda and Jack Fry. We were glad to see her again.

Sunday afternoon when Dianna Morris finished her time in the office, she asked her husband to bring another car to Hyland Crest so they could take five residents to Kawartha Dairy. They treated each of us to an ice cream cone. This was so very thoughtful. We appreciate and thank you both very much. Those who went were Mary Smith, Nora Groves, Gerty McKay, Ada Turrel and Winnifred Barnum.

Sunday night chapel service was taken by Rev. John Burgess and Alice Jones played the organ. Those who were there thank them sincerely.

Congratulations to Nora Groves who had a birthday August 28 and Vera Archer whose birthday was on August 25. Best wishes.

Monday evening Dorothy Hunter was here to show us movies: "Two Worlds of Hong Kong" and "Two Little Owls." Thank you, we enjoyed them immensely.

Tuesday morning Doris Robertson conducted the chapel service and played the organ for the hymns. Everyone enjoyed it and thank Doris from the bottom of their hearts.

In the afternoon Doris took us for a bus ride to Brady Lake. There is a lovely place at the head of the lake where you are able to see the whole length. Coming home we travelled to Carnarvon and Highway 35. We stopped at the Kawartha Dairy for our usual ice cream cones. When we offered them money they would not take it. It is impossible to express our thanks strong enough but we really do thank them. We also thank Doris our driver and Erika Bradamore (nursing staff) for her help.

A pet potatoe

Last year when Gladys Peck went her garden, she came across this potato which was too cute to eat. Saying it reminds her of a turtle, Mrs. Peck, who lives in Stanhope, dressed it up for a visit to The Echo office. Now she thinks she'll plant it to see what turns up next year.

Students off to new horizons present Percy with his 60-year pin. Larry also gave him his own forget-me-not pin as a memento on a personal level.

The Youngs and the Drydales had tea at the Maple Lake house afterward, before Percy returned from his day with the family which included a visit at the Perry Morrisons.

Gerald Morrison is off to university at Waterloo this week.

Shannon Sisson is leaving for Peterborough to take nursing at Sir Sandford Fleming College.

Kendra Sisson is taking law enforcement at Sir Sandford in Peterborough.

Both Jennifer Wallace and Terry Lynn Barry will be attending Seneca College in Toronto to study nursing. Good luck to all of you.

The first meeting of the United Church Women of this area will be held at Maple Lake United Church on Sept. 5 at 7:30 p.m. The Region 6 U.C.W. Rally will be held on Sept. 12, at Maple Lake United Church with registration at 9:30 a.m. The theme is REACHING OUT.

The 85th anniversary of the West Guilford Baptist Church was held on Sunday, August 26, 1990.

The guest speaker was the retired minister, the Rev. Benson who so capably filled in for the congregation after the Rev. John Smith left and until Pastor Brian Plouffe was ready to assume this ministry. After the special service, which included music by Ron and Rosella Smith of Toronto, a luncheon was enjoyed by the congregation over a happy time of fellowship.

Brotherhood of Anglican churchmen meets for the last time this year at St. Andrew's Church on Sunday, Sept. 9 at 8:00 a.m.

Fire truck arrives for Monmouth department purchase of a new fire truck for the Monmouth Volunteer Fire Dept. The new 1990 model will be more efficient, easier to handle and faster to operate. They also obtained a new hose, two air packs and seven bunker suits. The bunker suits, now required for the use of all firemen by the Fire Marshal, are expensive and will be bought a few at a time until all the men are equipped. The number of fire calls are down from those of last year but there has been an increase in calls for the first response team.

Sat. September 1, 1990 was a fine day for the wedding of Shelley Hughey and Randy Buckner who were married at the St. John Vianney Catholic Church. A reception followed at the Lloyd Watson Centre in Wilberforce. Shelly, daughter of Beatrice and Norman Hughey of Highland Grove, became acquainted with Randy, who comes from North Bay, at a Barrie college where they were both taking a three year course.

Beatrice Hughey is an accomplished dressmaker who made the lovely gowns worn by the bridal party. Many happy days are ahead for the popular couple who will be making their home in Barrie.

The ins and outs of the GST are explained yet received Royal Assent, Revenue Canada would like to help businesses and organizations prepare for the implementation of the tax.

In order to keep the proposed GST as simple as possible for small firms, a simplified accounting method has been developed called the 'Quick Method'.

The 'Quick Method' can be used if your business makes and sells goods, or provides services (except legal, accounting or financial services) and sales are no more than $200,000 a year, OR if you run a grocery or convenience store, no more than $500,000 a year.

This method, and the 'Streamlined Accounting' method are explained in two booklets available at your nearest Information Centre or by calling Revenue Canada toll-free at 1-800-267-6620.

In Haliburton, the centre is open Monday-Friday 10:00 a.m. - 4:00 p.m.

IN MEMORIAM

ACKLEY-HOWARD — In loving memory of a dear father, grandfather and great grandfather who passed away Sept. 9, 1986. We wander to your grave side. Place flowers there with love and care. No one knows the heart ache. When we turn and leave you there. They say time heals everything. We know that isn't so. Because it hurts as much today. As it did four years ago. Sadly missed by Maxine Preston & family.
